

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

THE CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS

OB

GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND DURING THE MIDDLE AGES.

PUBLISHED BY THE AUTHORITY OF HER MAJESTY'S TREASURY, UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.

On the 26th of January 1857, the Master of the Rolls submitted to the Treasury a proposal for the publication of materials for the History of this Country from the Invasion of the Romans to the Reign of Henry VIII.

The Master of the Rolls suggested that these materials should be selected for publication under competent editors without reference to periodical or chronological arrangement, without mutilation or abridgment, preference being given, in the first instance, to such materials as were most scarce and valuable.

He proposed that each chronicle or historical document to be edited should be treated in the same way as if the editor were engaged on an Editio Princeps; and for this purpose the most correct text should be formed from an accurate collation of the best MSS.

To render the work more generally useful, the Master of the Rolls suggested that the editor should give an account of the MSS. employed by him, of their age and their peculiarities; that he should add to the work a brief account of the life and times of the author, and any remarks necessary to explain the chronology; but no other note or comment was to be allowed, except what might be necessary to establish the correctness of the text.

The works to be published in octavo, separately, as they were finished; the whole responsibility of the task resting upon the editors, who were to be chosen by the Master of the Rolls with the sanction of the Treasury.

The Lords of Her Majesty's Treasury, after a careful consideration of the subject, expressed their opinion in a Treasury Minute, dated February 9, 1857, that the plan recommended by the Master of the Rolls "was well calculated for the accomplishment of this important national object, in an effectual and satisfactory manner, within a reasonable time, and provided proper attention be paid to economy, in making the detailed arrangements, without unnecessary expense."

They expressed their approbation of the proposal that each chronicle and historical document should be edited in such a manner as to represent with all possible correctness the text of each writer, derived from a collation of the best MSS., and that no notes should be added, except such as were illustrative of the various readings. They suggested, however, that the preface to each work should contain, in addition to the particulars proposed by the Master of the Rolls, a biographical account of the author, so far as authentic materials existed for that purpose, and an estimate of his historical credibility and value.

INTRODUCTION.

THE work which is here offered to the public is a collection of documents various in their nature both as to subject and antiquity. The period of time which they cover is little less than three hundred years.

In the first place some account shall here be given of the MSS. from which the following pages are derived.

It will be found that throughout the work reference Mode of is given on the margin of the pages, in the case of reference to almost every separate article, to the MS. and folios of the MS. from which such article is transcribed. Thus the letters A., B., C., D., F., CC., Asa., Aa. indicate several MS. volumes so marked on their cover, and referred to in other works, as well as in Of each of them a short dethis, by those letters. scription shall be attempted.

Of these MSS. A. is by far the most important. is a small quarto volume bound in leather and consisting book. of about one hundred leaves.1 The writing is of various periods, the oldest in the volume not being earlier than the year 1350. The greater portion is of considerably later date: the various articles are, however, by various hands and cannot be with certainty referred to any exact date, except when such date happens to be given in the article itself. The several antiquaries, who have handled the volume, do not seem to agree as to its antiquity; for on the first leaf is written, "Liber Vice Canc. Oxon scriptus manu originali de anno Domini 1375, ut liquet p. 13, Edwardi III. 49°." Another hand adds, "Yet see things written here in "hands ancienter than that time on pp. 7, 28, 47, "65, 68, 91, 209, 75, 80." And a third writes below, "Have dieta sunt ex sententia clarissimi antiquarii "Briani Twyni S. T. B. cujus nota have est, licet minus "probabilis et cui fides hand facile adhibenda." These three notes were written, it would seem by the character of their hand, by Antony Wood, Bryan Twyne, and William Smith, of whom the two latter were keepers of the archives of the University, and the last especially to be trusted.

Its probable age,

In assigning, therefore, the date 1350 as that of the most ancient MS. we shall not, probably, understate its antiquity.

This MS. volume is commonly known as the Chancellor's or Commissary's book, the title of "Vice " Chancellor" not occurring earlier than the year 1450 or thereabouts. It is, though not of great antiquity, truly a venerable and curious volume, written in and handled by the successive chancellors and their commissaries, consulted on every emergency, referred to in every difficulty, accepted as a final authority in every disputed case which arose for centuries. How many illustrious men have pored over it, in how many scenes of interest has it not borne a part, in how many rooms of long defunct and scarce remembered halls has it not been treasured! And yet it is in no sense to be regarded as an original, as will be seen when its contents are further described. On opening the volume the first document we find is one of the year 1575, being an "Inspeximus" of Queen Elizabeth. This, of course has been omitted in the following work, along with all other articles of later date than the period of time embraced in the scheme of this series: next follows an indenture between the University and the town, of the year 1458, which will be found in its proper place in this volume: then follows the calendar, which is of not a later date than 1420, and probably it is earlier than that time: it is terribly damaged by erasures and blots throughout, so much so indeed that without the assistance afforded by the other calendars in B. & C. it would not have been possible to reproduce it as has been done in this work: at the top of the calendar for each month is a Latin doggrel rhyme, which is however so far obliterated that it is beyond recovery and has been therefore omitted in this work. Immediately following the calendar is a very rude illuminated picture of the Crucifixion, the full size of the page, the legend below which has been carefully erased. It is indeed evident that the whole volume has been most shamefully maltreated at some period posterior to the Reformation: in all instances where the name of the Blessed Virgin Mary occurs, that name has been erased or obliterated, along with other expressions which offended the mind of those into whose hands the MS. had then fallen. This alone would have defaced it considerably, but this is only a small part of the damage that it has sustained. In many parts of the volume a whole folio is oblite-Mutilation of rated, and very much more frequently a whole statute or other article. This has been done probably from various reasons; sometimes, no doubt, because the particular statute in question had been superseded; sometimes, there is too much reason to think, because its provisions were not acceptable to the possessor of the book for the time being; but the majority of the obliterations have in all probability been caused by treating the pages too freely with galls, which rendered the faded portions legible for the time, but shortly after in Archbishop left them almost black. This sad destruction appears to have been effected in Archbishop Laud's time, when the whole statute book was revised and the old book transcribed for reference.

Late transcript of, in the Bodleian Library.

The transcript of A. then made still exists in the Bodleian Library, it is marked E., and has been constantly referred to by the editor, but in no case used as an authority.

The passages obliterated, as described, have been scrutinized with the greatest care, and, by here and there tracing the outlines of the letters and comparing the result with the MSS. B. and C., most of the destroyed portions have, it is hoped, been once more brought to light; some, however, are undoubtedly lost irretrievably, and a short time more would have sufficed to render illegible much that has now been preserved.

Following the calendar are some notes apparently for its use; these will be found in Part II., of this work [pp. 370-373]. Next in order in the MS. come several charters by "inspeximus" of successive sovereigns, and with them, and also scattered here and there throughout the volume, a number of patent letters of the several sovereigns addressed to the Uni-Of these charters and patent letters no notice has been taken in preparing the present work, excepting a few given in the Appendix, which, it is thought, have not yet been printed, and which are not mentioned, unless the editor has overlooked them by accident, in the catalogue published a few years ago by the University Commissioners. The bulk of the articles in A., which are printed in the present work occur in the middle of the MS. volume; they are followed in the MS. by several Papal bulls, which, as being accessible elsewhere, have also been omitted here; by a list of the Chancellors of the University. of rather late date, and of no authority, except so far as corroborated from other sources; by a few scattered notes as to assize of measures, &c., and price of wheat; and, lastly, by a collection of comparatively modern statutes—of the years 1564-5, according to Bryan Twyne's opinion—which have been added to the volume, and bound up with it on the occasion of its last binding, as it would seem. The "inspeximus" by Queen Elizabeth, which stands at the commencement of the MS, as stated above, was evidently there placed at the same time. The original binding of the volume was, it is known, far more costly than the present, and ornamented with a silver clasp. The book was solemnly delivered to each succeeding Chancellor on his election, along with the other insignia (see p. 284), and by him similarly surrendered at the expiration of his term of office.

Next in order is the MS. marked B., known as the The Southern Senior or Southern Proctor's book. This is a larger Proctor's book. volume than A., but contains almost exactly the same matter, with, however, some additions and some omissions. Almost the exact date of this MS. is known; for the expenses of the production of the volume are to be found in the Archives of the University, where the following particulars, under the year 1477, occur.

d. Item, pro scriptura et materia Libri Procuratoris 3 17 Item, pro luminatione ejusdem libri 1 8 Item, pro ligatura ejusdem libri 2 Item, pro pare plusculorum ejusdem 0 12 libri Item, Procuratori et aliis magistris pro copia supervidenda ejusdem libri, ut patet auditoribus 3 Item, pro laboribus scriptoris pro perquisitione copiæ ejusdem libri, ut placet judicibus 3 8 10

It must be admitted that the Proctor and Masters who superintended the work were exorbitantly remunerated, for a MS. more full of blunders, both clerical and grammatical, can hardly be found.

The binding here spoken of has long been lost, as also have the clasps, and at present the volume is heavily bound in rough calf.

The Northern

The third is MS. C., known as the junior or Northern Proctor's book, Proctor's book. This is similar in appearance to the preceding, but of considerably earlier date, and has, of course, like B, been rebound at a comparatively recent time. It was caused to be written by Richard Fleming, afterwards Prebendary of York, and later, Bishop of Lincoln, during his proctorship in the year 1407. (See p. 237.)

> It is hardly too much to say that without the assistance afforded by collating this MS. with the two above-mentioned, the work now offered to the public, could with difficulty have been completed. In C. there is some attempt at arrangement, as will be seen by the account given of its contents in the introduction to it, which will be found in its proper chronological place in this volume (pp. 237-9). Perhaps it would be more correct, or at least would give the reader a better idea of the MS., to say that some arrangement was originally attempted both in this and in A. and B.; but that in C. the order has been less interfered with by insertion of new matter after the original writing was completed, or by erasure of older matter and introduction of new folios.

> The present state of all these MSS, is a perfect mass of confusion; statutes relating to one faculty mixed up with those of another, without any regard to order or facility of reference.

Re-arrangement of contents of the MSS.

It will, perhaps, be asked why the preface to C. (p. 237), was not prefixed to this work or to C. itself. The answer is that, so far as practicable, it has been the editor's aim to arrange the contents of A., B., and Superiority of to the other two.

C. chronologically. The three MSS, are in fact one work, or rather three copies of one work. The main interest attaching to their contents is to be derived from the time at which they were respectively written. It is greatly to be regretted that so little certainty is attainable as to the real date of a large proportion of the contents. The aim, however, of the present work has been to arrange the several statutes in order of This has been attempted by taking those, which have dates contained either in their preamble or at their conclusion, and using them as examples by which to judge of the date of the others. This will be thought not a very sure guide, and it is readily admitted that it is not, but more accuracy was attainable, it is hoped, by this plan than may be supposed. For, as we have already noticed, the statutes in A. are written in various hands, and these of very distinct character in many cases. Here, therefore, there has often been found a tolerably fair ground for assuming the contemporaneity of other statutes without date which appear in the same hand.

Other criteria have been also used in endeavouring to approximate to the real dates, indications which would probably seem trifling to the ordinary reader, but which have a real value in the eye of one who studies the same MSS. for months or even years; gradually one acquires a power of discerning objects where at first all seemed impenetrable night; traces of agreement and resemblance become more and more distinct by comparison, and parts, which at first appeared utterly incongruous, bear marks which fairly entitle them to be considered as a whole.

The editor is, however, as conscious at least as any of his readers can be that probably very many errors are to be found in his attempt at chronological arrangement. He is not the first who has attempted to arrange has been before the matter of these MSS. One such attempt in MS. attempted unsuccessfully.

[E.] has already been alluded to, which still exists in the Bodleian Library; of its value as a guide to chronology of the statutes there can be but one opinion, it is wholly useless; in fact, such an arrangement does not appear to have been attempted, but given up in despair. Another such attempt, if such it can be called, was made on the occasion of the late commission, and two or three copies of the result were printed; one was lent to the editor by the present Bishop of Peterborough. The three MSS. hitherto noticed form a collection of themselves, and are preserved among the archives of the University. They were originally, as has been stated, the property of the chancellor and proctors for the time being; but, when their contents (practically if not legally) were superseded, as was presumed, by the Laudian code, they ceased to be used, except occasionally for reference, and have long become rather literary curiosities than books of practical use. They form the basis of the present work. Next we proceed to mention the other MSS. which have been used. Of these the first is that known as It is a smaller volume than any of the preceding, consisting of about one hundred leaves of parchment, thickly bound in wood covered with leather, and with brazen clasps. This MS. is not a portion of the University archives properly so called, being now in the Bodleian Library, and accessible to ordinary readers there. It appears to be simply another proctor's book, by whom written, or when, there is nothing to show, except its appearance; from this it would appear to be Its description of about the same date as C. It is a singularly careless performance, written in one uniform hand throughout, with few and poor illuminations; the words are unusually abbreviated and difficult to decipher; there is no attempt whatever at arrangement, but a rude index is given at the end. The contents are for the > most part the same with those of A., B., and C. but with some additions, and they of a very interesting nature; these will be identified by the reader by the reference being made, to D. only, on the margin.

C.C. is a MS. volume of the latter end of the fifteenth C.C. is of the century, somewhat similar in general appearance, and same nature, and contains also in contents, to A., B., and C.; but it contains some-similar matter. what less matter than any of those three MSS., and not nearly so much as the three collectively. It is in very good condition and very legibly written, but full of clerical errors. It would appear that this MS and D. have been transcribed by or for some chancellor or proctor and kept for their private use, and have thus found their way into private collections; and thence to the public libraries. D. being now, as above stated, in the Bodleian Library, and C.C. in the British Museum. [Claudius D. 8. Cott. MSS.]

This is the last of the MSS. which the editor has been able to discover, of the "Chancellor's and Proctor's It is the least valuable of them all, and has not been collated throughout, as the other four MSS. have been, in the preparation of these volumes.

It remains now to notice the other MSS, here used, Farley's These are marked and generally known as F., Aaa, Register, a volume of and Aa., and may be described as register books of letters. the University. The first [F.] is a thick volume of parchment bound in leather with brazen clasps, and contains, interspersed with other matter, a series of letters from and to the University, all of the fifteenth century. It is written throughout apparently by the same hand, at Description of least by far the larger proportion would seem to be so: the MS. nearly the whole is much faded, full of abbreviations, and very difficult to decipher. The letters, &c. are nearly five hundred in number, many of them very curious. The volume also contains the two catalogues of books given by Humfrey, Duke of Gloucester, to the University; and the annual entries of payment of money to the University by the Abbeys of Eynsham and Oseneye. A large number of the letters are " letters testimonial" of the University granted to various members and recommending them to bishops and other magnates. This register was transcribed from the original letters, presumed to be destroyed when the register was made, by Farley, the scribe of the University at the time. It has only been used in the present work for the purpose of publishing the Catalogues of Duke Humfrey's books, which will accordingly be found in Part II. of this volume. The editor has, however, read and catalogued almost the whole, with a view to an extension of the work now edited, at a future period. The letters are principally in Latin, though here and there occurs one in English.

Acts of the Chancellor's Court.

The MS. Aaa. next requires notice. This is a volume of similar size to the others, but containing a much larger amount of matter; it has about two hundred and eighty folios, closely written, and consists of the proceedings in the Chancellor's Court from the year 1434 to the year 1469, except the years 1440-1441. The whole is written on paper, without any attempt at ornament or illumination, and in the most slovenly manner possible. The proceedings at each sitting of the court are entered by the Chancellor, or his commissary for the time, in his own handwriting, hence the volume is curious as a repertory of autographs of that period. Some of the hands are well known, as that of Dr. Gascoigne; which presents a singularly bold and irregular appearance. In this MS, as also in all, (but less so in F. than in the others) the folios have more than one pagination. The loss of some folios has rendered a fresh set of figures necessary. This produces not a little confusion in referring to the originals. To the editor this MS. has proved the most interesting by far, and he only regrets that he has not been able to publish the whole in the present series. Several specimens, however, of each species of matter entered in the register have been given in this work, and pains have been and contents of taken to select those which seemed to present the this MS. greatest features of general interest. A great deal will here be found illustrative of the actual private life of the members of the University at the time; for instance we are here able to see, enumerated with perfect distinctness, the articles of furniture which were contained in the camera or "rooms" of a scholar of the fifteenth century; his books, his dress, not seldom his debts, his quarrels, amusements, &c. will be incidently sketched or detailed. Several wills are also given, not because wills of that period are in themselves a rarity, for the editor is well aware that good specimens have already been published; but he believes that not a little will be found in those printed in the present volumes which will bring to light facts, certainly not generally known, as to the state of the Universities; curious details about sickness, expenses, books, debts, funerals, exhibitions to poor scholars and servants for their maintenance at the University, with a variety of other matter, which will be noticed, as we proceed, more in detail.

Aa. is a similar but smaller volume, also written on paper. It is much damaged and often utterly illegible, torn, faded, and stained. It is a register of Register of the Convocation of the University, and is chiefly, therefore, composed of the various graces granted therein. A few of the more curious of them, either as containing information relating to studies requisite, or conditions upon which the grace was granted, have been selected for the present purpose. The date of this volume is the same, or nearly so, as that of Aaa.

Here then the list of original MSS. made use of is complete.

As it is commonly supposed that there are a great The materials number of MS. volumes, relating to the University, in for an extenits possession, it may be as well perhaps to correct or work existing. at least to modify that impression. There are, the editor believes, no MS. volumes in "the archives" of the University older than those transcribed and collated here; and those here used are all that exist down to that date, after which there follows a regular succession of registers.

There is, of course, a vast quantity of deeds of various kinds, though, it is believed, none are very ancient, not more so than the beginning of the thirteenth or end of the twelfth century; but of this the editor cannot speak with certainty, at least not from personal examination.

Thus, no register, with the exception of those here used, and no collection of letters, is to be found until the fifteenth century. Whether any such MSS. ever Registers prior existed, and, if so, what has become of them, is not perhaps altogether a futile inquiry; probably they perished from having been originally written on loose sheets and never being gathered into a volume; for we find that in the case of the statutes it was provided that the proctors should, under a penalty, enter in A., B., and C. the several statutes as they were passed, within fifteen days from their passing (p. 253). We several times also find notices of "quaterni" or sheets, on which registers were kept (p. 285), and of the "liber ruber" (p. 486). However, the lapse of time itself will sufficiently account for the loss, and the editor mentions the subject here in the hope only that inquiry may be stimulated, believing as he does, that it is possible that considerable portions of such registers may yet exist in the form of loose sheets in private collections.

MSS. relating to the halls.

The loss most to be deplored, however, is that of all trace of any MSS, belonging to the numerous halls: and yet each must have possessed, and we know did possess its own registers, and, no doubt, its "acta," &c. What a mass of information as to the detail of University life, or even of mediæval life generally, would have been here afforded! It seems well nigh impossible that, even putting the halls at the modest number of one hundred, so large a quantity of MSS. as must have existed should have utterly perished: one would suppose that the families of the various principals or the colleges 1 into whose possession the buildings passed, would have retained the papers of the last principal of each hall as it was in its turn swallowed up in the advancing tide of the colleges, which, as they were successively endowed and gradually extended, enclosed within their limits the sites of by far the larger portion of the old halls. Hitherto, however, no such memorials of the halls have been met with.

The present would seem to be no improper place for the mention of other MSS, in connexion with the subject, of which no use has been made by the editor of the present volume, and from which it is possible that matter hitherto unpublished may be derived.

And first, to speak of what may still remain at Other possible Oxford unexplored, it is possible that in the Bodleian explored. Library something may still be found, more likely, however, in the several colleges, stored in the muniment rooms and never seen, or effectually concealed by being bound up with other loose sheets, papers may yet remain which would repay the labour of the antiquary. The editor, however, believes that the resources of the University in this respect are very considerably overrated by those who have had no experience in such investigations; he has himself found little or nothing of value in the places indicated, and is inclined to think that if there are any important original MSS. relating to mediæval Oxford, which have not hitherto been published, besides those now edited, or mentioned in the foregoing remarks, they are to be found elsewhere and not at Oxford.

The collections of Hare and Brian Twyne.

Of Transcript MSS, there are several at Oxford, which, or at least parts of which, ought to be published. In the first place there is Hare's collection of the liberties and privileges of the University. This contains all the royal letters and charters up to the collector's time; no complete printed copy of these exists. The most voluminous and most valuable, however, are the collections of Brian Twyne; considering the early age at which this laborious antiquary died, it is truly amazing that he should have been able to write so vast a quantity, collected too, as a great deal of it is, from distant places. His MSS, consist of ten thick quarto volumes; the materials are collected from all sources, and there is no doubt they were the real authorities of Antony Wood's History. They are mentioned here principally because The registers of they contain extracts from the registers of the Bishop of Lincoln and the Archbishop of Canterbury, and from other episcopal registers, the publication of which, or such portions of them as relate to the Universities. would very likely prove to be a valuable addition to our > Besides these, there is in the School's tower, or was, a smaller quarto MS. volume written by a Mr. Winsor, but it is only a modern production and of no sort of historical value, and is only mentioned here lest it should be supposed that it had been overlooked.

present knowledge; at least they would be originals.

In the British Museum there are two MS. volumes containing matter relating to our subject: Vitellius E. 10. Cott. has a number of letters of Gilbert Stone and of the University. Faustina C. 7. Cott. is a transcript of several ancient documents, and a number of original letters of the fifteenth century. Whatever in these two volumes is worth printing will more properly be placed along with the letters in F. if that MS. should ever be edited.

There is no doubt that at one time there were also The city in the possession of the city of Oxford materials highly archives. valuable as illustrative of the history of the University; but the more important of them have perished. The authorities of the city, with great civility and liberality, allowed the editor to inspect their archives, but there did not appear to be anything original of any value for the present work. One MS. volume, "Liber ruber minor," was, it is said, borrowed by Bryan Twyne, and never restored to the city authorities; whether this be the case or not, at any rate the MS, which was a valuable one, is not known to exist now.

At Rome, and at Paris, and at some other foreign Foreign universities, it is not improbable that some additional we. materials might be found, though it is more likely that the archives of the University of Paris would be found to contain little more of any interest relating to Oxford than the names of masters who had migrated from the one university to the other, as they will similarly be found recorded in the registers of Convocation at Oxford, of which a specimen or two are given in Part II. At Rome it is on the contrary highly probable that there exist, along with other interesting details, accounts of the various processes of appeal, &c. which were so often carried from Oxford to the Papal see.

Between Oxford and other foreign universities, during the fifteenth century (and of the 14th and 13th centuries Oxford possesses no records beyond those here edited) the communication was not so great or frequent, or the migration of masters so common, as at an earlier time it is asserted to have been.

Before dismissing the subject of MSS. it should be stated that although the statutes in Part I. of this volume are, as observed already, arranged chronologically to the best of the editor's power, this plan has not been adopted with respect to that portion of A., B., and C., which will be found in Part II. The reason of this is simply that the attempt proved to be in vain; no clue of any importance could be found such as to render their chronological order possible. Moreover, it is the opinion of the editor that a considerable portion of these statutes are far older than anything else relating to the University at present existing in MSS., or indeed existing at all; such as, for instance, those on pp. 443-5. "Antiquæ ordinationes pro Magistris" in Grammatica, sed non sunt in moderno usu."

Since, therefore, it seemed hopeless to arrange these statutes chronologically, recourse has been had to the plan originally followed by the register writers of A., B., and C., i.e., the matter has been arranged in the order of the various faculties so far as it relates specially to any of them. The residue, fortunately not a great quantity, has been necessarily left in its own confusion at the end, pp. 446 to 494.

Having given an account of the various MSS. from which the following pages are transcribed, it remains that the general scope and plan of the work should be noticed, and then a brief description of its contents given.

This work is not a history of the University. First, the reader is requested to expect to find no more than can be furnished in a work forming a portion of such a series as the present. The editor believes this caution to be needed, because more than one inquiry has been addressed to him respecting the "History" of the University" which he is preparing. No history of the University will be found here; however much in accordance with his own tastes the undertaking of such a work would have been, it could find no place in a series of original MSS. intended as sources of information to other writers rather than popular histories for ordinary readers. The history of the University of Oxford has yet to be written, and it is in the hope of contributing something to the attainment of this object that the present volume has been undertaken.

The histories of the University that have hitherto The history of appeared are really of very little service as histories. Antony Wood. The "History and Antiquities" of Antony Wood is, it is true, a wonderful repertory of antiquarian knowledge, and, in the main, reliable from the reign of Henry III. onwards. The other histories, if so they can be called, which have been written by English authors are almost The best known is that of Dr. Ayliffe, Dr. Ayliffe. of which it is hardly too much to say that it is literally full of the grossest blunders, and, though probably unintentionally, impostures. If the writer were to state his own opinion as to which is the most reliable history of the University of Oxford that has yet appeared, it would be that it is that of Hüber. It is truly surprising Hüber. that a foreigner has so completely seized and comprehended the national position, and internal working of the University. He has produced a book at once readable and, as far as it goes, accurate, based on a sound critical view of antiquity and comparative research. And yet, though this is high praise, the reader of that work will find much to desiderate. As the history of Antony Wood is rather an antiquarian compendium than a history, so is Hüber's on the other hand, rather a popular and readable history than such an union of antiquarian research and historical construction such as alone could satisfy the want. The history of the Uni- The history of versity has, we repeat, yet to be written; when a the University has yet to be person can be found, with leisure at his command and written. tastes leading him in that direction, completely to explore the archives both of the University and the several colleges, the registers of Lambeth and Lincoln, and other sources already above indicated, such a work can be produced. More materials than we at present possess might in this way be made available, and discoveries might be made at present unsuspected.

The plan of the present work.

The work at present offered has undergone considerable modification as to its scope since it was in the first instance conceived. The editor's original plan was to collect from all sources such hitherto unpublished documents as would illustrate academical life and studies from the reign of Henry III. to that of Henry VIII., but, upon commencing an examination of the materials existing for the compiling of such a collection, it appeared to him that nothing could be found more valuable in this way than the manuscripts which are here printed. They may be described as consisting, with few exceptions, of two distinct parts; first, the old statute books; and second, the application of those statutes, and their operation exhibited in detail. Thus, while the first named part shows what the provisions and requirements of the University were, the second, at least to some extent, displays the inner and individual life of its members. Whatever other matters are included in the work are supposed to be subsidiary to these two main subjects.

It consists of two parts.

The reason for its limits.

And here it will not improbably be asked why the period embraced in this work should be commenced with the reign of Henry III.1 The answer will, it is hoped, be sufficiently stated in the short historical summary with which it seems almost necessary to introduce what will follow.

Sketch of the

That Oxford was early a place of some considerable early history of importance seems probably true, though it is to be noted that it is not mentioned in the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle earlier than the commencement of the ninth The city, not the University, is now spoken of. As to the name Oxford, it has been suggested that it is not, as usually supposed, derived from ox and ford, because the analogy of the name Oseneye would point to the origin of the name from ose or ouse and ford.

· This theory is not without merits, but it seems most and etymology likely after all that the old derivation is the right one, of the name. and that it is more likely that osen-eye, is itself a corruption of oxen-eye, when we compare with it the name of the neighbouring villages of Hengs-eye (now Hincksey), (see page 516). Thus Oxen-eye and Hengseye would be the island of the ox and the horse respectively, and Oxenford is probably one of the same family of names. With the history, however, of the city we have here nothing to do, except so far as it is connected with the University. Of the origin of the University absolutely nothing is known, some maintaining that it gave rise to the town, others that the town preceded the University. The whole dispute speedily takes us back into the region of utter fables, only comparable with those of "Jack the Giant Killer" The fabulous and "King Arthur and his Knights." Those who wish A. Wood and to see what has been dared in the way of fable, as to Bryan Twyne. the antiquity of Oxford, can see it in the pages of Antony Wood and Bryan Twyne. The fact is, that the history of the University is a miniature of the history of a nation, and is not exempt from the general laws of all history; it begins in myth, it has its heroic age, its really historical, and its modern periods. Of the mythical period, if it can be seriously named at all, it can only be, of course, to regret the folly which seems to have infatuated a man otherwise sensible, as Antony Wood was, and led him to invent or repeat the myth of Memprick (a thousand years before the incarnation of Christ), King of the Britains. and of Brute the Trojan, and other like absurdities. Whether the study of antiquity really led him on till he partly believed what he wished to be true (for it undoubtedly has this effect on some minds, while in others it produces an almost equally irrational scepticism);

The later period of real persons and false facts. or whether he intended the whole of that portion of his work as a ponderous joke is perhaps hardly worth inquiring. It may suffice to have thus noticed it, and to further observe that the references to authors and MSS. at the foot of the pages of that part of his work will be found instructive to those who choose to refer to the originals for themselves, as showing how large a theory can be formed from very slender facts. Even that, which has been called above the heroic period, is scarcely more trustworthy; but here we do come to at least real persons, Alfred and Grymbald, and the rest, though acts are ascribed to them which we may safely affirm they never performed. It is not until we get much further down the stream of time that anything really reliable can be found. John of Beverley, Alfred, Grymbald, S. Neot, and the like, are the demi-gods of the Oxford world; then come the degenerate race of mortal heros. • Vacarius and Giraldus Cambrensis, and others of their time, who undoubtedly were connected with the University of Oxford, and whose giant forms, girt with gowns and armed with books, seem to stalk through the hosts of innumerable boys assembled at the schools much as we fancy the heroes of the Iliad wielding their weapons among the ranks of men.

Matter relating to Oxford published in other volumes of this series.

But for these things this is not the place. The series of volumes, of which the present is a part, will doubtless assist the student, who may wish to examine critically the period to which reference is made, and whatever may there occur to him relating to the University of Oxford, though it will, it is feared, be little, will assist his judgment in forming an opinion as to what is not indeed really ascertainable, the state of Oxford anterior to the thirteenth century.

The first schools at Oxford. That there were schools there before that time, probably for two or three centuries, if not longer, there is the best reason to believe, but of the nature of them we have little information, and the pictures which the mind forms of them, are such as are drawn, for the most part, from the better known features of a later period. That Connexion these schools were more or less connected with the with the University of University of Paris seems highly probable; though the Paris. extent to which they were so and the nature of that connexion are again matters of conjecture. That the earliest statutes of the University of Oxford were derived from those of Paris the editor has himself little doubt, but the means of forming an opinion on this subject are as easily available to others as they are to him; he would however venture to refer them to the work of Bulæus.<sup>1</sup> To the University of Paris he believes are to be ascribed the most ancient existing relics of the University of Oxford, namely some of the statutes which will be found in Part II. of this volume.

With these remarks the antiquity of the University generally must be dismissed; but as to the relative antiquity of the several colleges, or of the earliest of them, a brief statement will be expected.

Of the claims of University and Merton colleges to The first the priority it is really strange there should be ever Oxford. any question. The whole dispute is settled in a few William of Durham, the founder of University College, died in the year 1249, and left his money (310 marks) to support scholars at Oxford; the money The rival claims of Uniwas not all applied to this purpose for many years, versity and (though several purchases were made with it in the Merton Colleges. years 1253, 1255, 12622), and in the meantime Merton College was founded, but not at Oxford; before Merton College was finally established, William of Durham's bequest had been all applied by the University in the purchase of houses, and statutes given for the halls

Antony Wood's unfairness. founded therewith. No more need have been said, had not Antony Wood, who was a member of Merton College, while not concealing the facts above mentioned, endeavoured to make it appear that University College was only a hall, whereas Merton was a college, because it is called domus, so that the priority really belonged to the latter. This unfairness may easily be discovered to be such in the pages of this work, where it will be found throughout that Merton College is as often, if not oftener, called aula de Merton as domus or collegium (the latter not till late), and, in fact, Antony Wood must have known, what is obvious to every student of Oxford antiquities, that no distinction whatever originally existed between the terms aula and domus, and, moreover, that the term domus repeatedly used of University Hall.

The alleged foundation by Alfred the Great.

And now another vexata quastio must be touched, though the true solution of it has already been implied in what has been said of the early history of the The question whether Alfred the Great University. had any connexion with the University at all, and if so, whether he had any hand in the founding University Hall or any other hall in Oxford, has caused endless debate, not a little of legal toil and expenditure, and a great deal of pecuniary loss and still more bitterness of feeling! Volumes have been written on the subject, and yet it seems that no candid inquirer can come to any other verdict than that both statements as to King Alfred are absolutely without a shadow of proof. All that can be said in favour of the Aluredians is that there is no direct proof that they are wrong. The astonishing thing is that such a superstructure of fiction was ever raised upon so completely rotten a There is unfortunately only too much foundation. reason to believe that the story of Alfred being the founder of University College was invented, and maintained by one party in the college against another, in order to obtain the privilege of having the sovereign of the country as visitor of their society. The evidence against Alfred having ever founded any exhibitions at all at Oxford is of course of a purely negative character; but it is very strong, for none of those authors, in whose writings we should certainly have expected to find mention of such a circumstance, make any allusion to it whatsoever. To begin with Asser. He Asser makes no at any rate, the instructor and friend of Alfred, the mention of it. collector of his memorable actions, when ascribing to him the building of two monasteries, the maintenance of teachers for his own children and those of his nobles would surely, one would think, never have omitted to record a work of so kindred a nature as the establishing of educational exhibitions or places of learning at And yet we find in this author no such statement, for although it was indeed affirmed 1 that one of the MSS, of Asser contained such a passage, vet. it is believed, no such thing is now to be found, and the said passage was, moreover, affirmed by those who saw it to be a manifest interpolation. But even though it were granted that Alfred did, as alleged in the spurious passage of Asser, establish places of education at Oxford, yet there would be nothing to indicate that he had any hand in the founding of University Hall.

The same absence of any mention of such connexion Early chronibetween this king and the University is equally re-clers without exception silent markable in all the earliest authors, in Ethelward, in on the subject. the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, in the chronicle of Mailros, in Ingulphus, in Marianus Scotus, in Florence of Worcester, William of Malmesbury, Henry of Huntingdon, Roger Hoveden, Matthew of Westminster, and others, all of whom, while they extol the wisdom, valour, and piety of Alfred, are altogether silent as to his supposed endowments at Oxford!

The first appearance of the myth.

Camden and Leland.

The first chronicler, in whose writings such a statement is met with, is Ralph Higden; he lived in the time of Edward III. John Brompton in his Historia Jorvallensis, has a passage to the like effect. Here are the two most respectable authorities for the Aluredians; for no sane person would attach any credit to the fables of Thos. Rudborn's Annals of Hyde Abbey. Other writers in their favour are John Ross, T. Kay, Polydore Virgil, Leland, Bale, Camden. It is not without regret that we find such names as Leland and Camden following so false a lead; they, with Wood and Twyne, seem to have only too gladly repeated without sufficient investigation the statements of others, led by their love of antiquity to lend a willing ear to that which gratified their master passion. At least it is plain, from what has been said above, that the founding of halls or places of learning at Oxford by King Alfred was not mentioned by any writer until the time of Edward III.; and the special connexion of Alfred with the halls known as W. of Durham's or University Hall, not until a much later period. The only real claim of Alfred to be considered as the founder of University College is that, as this society is without doubt the eldest, so it seems in harmony with our general ideas of propriety to attribute its origin to the wisest and best of our early kings!valeat quantum. Unfortunately the claim, sentimental or false, while it is an agreeable myth and no more, has had the effect of causing the name of the true founder W. of Durham to be altogether ignored. Thus have the Aluredians and anti-Aluredians fought with fury round the shadow of a founder, while the real owner of the honours has been conveyed away far out of sight, and not only out of the din of the battle, but also out of the memory of the combatants.

The archives of It is altogether incredible that, if Alfred were its the University founder, the statutes of University College, three seand of University veral codes of which were issued within sixty years sity College from the purchase of the first house with the founder's know nothing of him. money, should contain not the smallest allusion to him. Still more incredible that the statutes and register books of the University should never once mention the name of their first founder, while special ordinances are given, and commemorations with solemn masses and other annual observances are therein enjoined for every known benefactor in later times. (See in Index under Benefactor and Chest.)

It will be perceived from what has already been Early history said that little, which can be called history, is to be scanty. found of the University of Oxford in early times. After the conquest, during the seven reigns which preceded Contemporary that of Henry III. we begin to be sensible of the approach of terra firma, but it is not until the end of the twelfth century and beginning of the thirteenth that we can really feel that we have placed our feet on solid ground. It is no part of the present undertaking to collect whatever scattered notices of Oxford may exist in the chronicles and other sources during the dawn of its existence.

We pass on now to speak of the more tangible and really historical period, having thus sketched in as few words as possible some of the most salient points, and given, it is hoped, a sufficient reason for not commencing this volume with anything earlier than the 13th century. There are no documents in MS. begin with the in the possession of the University itself relating to an earlier period, and it is more than doubtful whether there are any, beyond those already mentioned, in any other collections. With one or two remarks more this subject shall be dismissed. First, while we cannot doubt that a considerable number of scholars studied at Oxford in the 11th and 12th centuries, yet the facts that no species of pecuniary support was from any source, that we know of, appointed for them, and that no royal charter or other letter has ever been produced hitherto, though A. Wood speaks of their loss, of an earlier reign than that of Henry III., seem to raise a very strong suspicion that the University did not exist at all before the conquest, and that as soon as it became important enough to deserve and require royal recognition it immediately obtained it, and thenceforth began its corporate existence, its true history in its only recognizable form. The origin of the city cannot be traced beyond the time of S. Frideswyde. Round the ecclesiastical foundation raised in her honour sprung up in all likelihood both the town and the schools, at first, it is probable, a school in connexion with S. Frideswyde's priory, afterwards developed by gradual successes to a more general place of resort for students; a "studium generale," as the term then generally used and meaning of expresses it. The word University is not used in our sense earlier than the reign of Henry III. In its first use the word "University" had probably no reference to the general studies there to be pursued, but rather expressed the corporate estate of the "Chancellor, mas-

Probable true origin of the

Of these the first that occurs is the annual payment of fifty-two shillings by the townsmen, as compensation in part for the outrage committed by them in hanging certain clerks (pp. 1, 2, 501), a burden which was afterwards undertaken by the abbey of Eynsham in The abbeys of the year 1219, and regularly discharged by them until Eynsham the dissolution of the monastery.1 A similar payment, how originating does not clearly appear, was made also by the abbey of Oseneye,1 but to a smaller amount, viz., and Oseneye. two marks only (p. 502). The former of these payments not having been regularly applied to the purpose for which it was designed, Robert Grossteste, the then and the Frideschancellor, issued in the year 1240 an ordinance to pro-wyde chest. vide for the proper administration of the fund: the immediate effect of which was the creation of the first "chest," called the "Frideswyde chest" (p. 9). Of this and other similar foundations more shall be said presently; here we must for a while interrupt the natural order by first enumerating the other sources of the of revenue. revenue of the infant University.

The next pecuniary resource we find is an annual Payments by payment by masters who kept grammar schools at grammar Oxford (p. 563). How early the practice arose there schools. is no evidence to show, but it appears that from the earliest time, at least of the corporate existence of the University, all masters keeping grammar schools were obliged to make a stated annual payment to the University, and a provision was made in the year 1478 that if any grammar schools should be endowed at Oxford, they should be free from this payment; an inducement doubtless to encourage so desirable a benefaction (p. 354). To this should be added the sum arising on students or others amenable to their authority, for the violation of statutes, and of the assize of bread, beer, &c.,—no inconsiderable source of annual revenue, to judge from the number of pecuniary mulcts occurring under every year in Aaa.; and again we must not omit the payments of money made by those who sought "graces" for special relaxation of statutes in their favour (numerous instances of which will be found in Part ii.), an indulgence which was a large and continuous source of emolument to the University during the erection of the Divinity School. (See Dispensation.) In A., B., C., &c. we find no other sources of revenue (except "chests") besides those mentioned, until Robert Anetone's and Walter (by some called William) de Gray's and John Benefactions in Manduit's benefactions (p. 10). These do not date imitation of the earlier than 1255, but it is known from other sources that W. Hoyland left, shortly before that time, his estate to the University, part of which, called after him "William Hall," was the first house, not bought with W. of Durham's money, possessed by the University. In the meantime had occurred the bequest of W. of Durham, of which sufficient notice has been given above (p. 39). Then followed bequests by Reginald de Bathon (p. 372), beadle, by Roger Addington (stationer), and by Roger Leigh (beadle), and from this time the University gradually began to acquire property. follow the steps of this process of acquisition is, however, no part of our present scheme, though it should be observed that all the bequests above named were either of houses for halls or shortly after were converted to that purpose, and thus were direct imitations of the example of William of Durham, who commenced

The poverty of the scholars was in a large majority of instances very great, and the fact that these chests continued to be founded side by side, as it were, with the colleges proves how necessary their assistance was. It has been said that these chests numbered altogether not less than twenty-four; perhaps they may have been more numerous, but of twenty-four we have either ordinances remaining or, at the least, portions of ordinances. The last founded of the chests (in the latter part of the fifteenth century) raises the total amount of money thus placed at the disposal of the University at no less a sum, on a moderate computation, than two thousand of the funds of. marks; and, in estimating the aid thus afforded to the needy, it should be borne in mind that this was not capital, of which the interest was to be lent only, but the whole two thousand marks might be, and probably usually were, in circulation on loan at the same time. It was in reality little less than a money-lending, or, more properly, pawnbroking, department; and might have been managed so as to secure very considerable augmentation of the funds, for the ordinances always carefully stipulate that the pledges deposited should, on the valuation of a sworn stationer of the University, fairly exceed in value the sum borrowed, that the capital might suffer no diminution. Such augmentation appears also, from the wording of the ordinances in some cases, to have been confidently expected, for the guardians at their audit were to give account both of capital and increase during their tenure of office. That these hopes were not realized there is every reason Embezzlement to believe, for more than once we find guardians of chests charged with embezzlement, and again (pp.

153-5) statutes which complain of the marvellous disappearance of the money of the University, and provide for its safer administration and protection for the future.

Whether or no there was any other distinction does not appear; but it is plain that in the time of appointing the guardians the original provisions of the ordinances were, in the later times which we have to deal with, not observed.

Here, then, was a very large sum, which might be bor- Restrictions on rowed by any clerk actually studying at Oxford, whether borrowers. master, bachelor, sophist, or questionist, irrespective of any restrictions by founders' wills as to birth, age, or locality. How great a help it must have been to the struggling scholar of those days we can perhaps hardly realize; but of this more may be said hereafter. What ordinary member of the University is aware of the pious benefactions, by which the University in its early poverty was nursed, of John Pontysera bishop of Winchester, Gilbert Routhbury, Philip Turville, John Langton, W. de Seltone, Dame Joan Danvers, and others; and yet to their generosity many a starving clerk was indebted in days when the learned professions were recruited far more than they have ever since been from the humblest ranks of society. We cannot take leave of so interesting a feature in mediæval academical life as this is without lingering for a few moments on the vivid picture thus pourtrayed to us of the life of a student at the time.

Description of the business of inspection of. from a chest.

Let us try to fancy ourselves in Oxford on the eve of the festival of "S. John at the Latin gate" and borrowing (May 7th), in the year of grace 1457. To-morrow is the commemoration day of W. de Seltone, founder of the chest known by his name; and this day the two new guardians of the chest have been appointed and sworn in before congregation, along with all the other guardians of the several chests. of course well known before who would be appointed to situations of such trust, but they are Master T. Parys, principal of S. Mary Hall, and Master Lowson (p. 745); the latter is the North countryman of the two, it would seem. High mass has just been sung at tion of founder. the principal altar of the church of S. Mary the Blessed Virgin (p. 214), with commemoration collects, with deacon and subdeacon and all accustomed solemnity, and solemn prayers for the repose of the souls of W. de Seltone and all the faithful departed. It is not a reading (or legible) day, so the church was full, but now all have left, except a few ragged-looking lads, who still kneel towards the altar and seem to be saying their "Pater nosters" and "Ave Marias" according to their vow for their benefactor (p. 218). Master Parys and Master Lowson, however, have left earlier; we will follow them out of the chancel into the old congregation house, a part of the church formerly used for all academical purposes; for thither, we presume, they will go to make their first inspection of the Seltone chest.

from one to another with the change of guardians every year, they are therefore kept in the church, and the sanctity of the spot is a protection from thieves (pp. 669, 750).)

The dress of Master Parys and his colleague may Dress of surprise us; they have their tonsured heads covered masters. with the "pilleum" (pp. 428, 457); their tunics are closely fastened round the waist by a belt (pp. 421, 302), over which they wear a long gown; round the shoulders is a black close cape without sleeves, and over it hangs the hood, lined with white fur (p. 301). We enter the building with them, and there we see ranged on either Appearance, side several ponderous iron chests, eight or ten feet in size, and length and about half that width, for they have to tion of a chest. contain perhaps as many as a hundred or more large volumes (pp. 327, 152), besides other valuables deposited as pledges by those who have borrowed from the chest. Each (p. 152) draws from beneath his cape a huge key, which one after the other are applied to the two locks; a system of bolts, which radiate from the centre of the lid and shoot into the iron sides in a dozen different places, slide back and the lid is opened. At the top Its contents. lies the register of the contents (p. 215), containing the particulars;—dates, names, and amounts—of the loans granted. This they remove and begin to compare its statements with the contents of the chest. There are a large number of manuscript volumes, many of great value, Books, beautifully illuminated and carefully kept, for each is almost the sole valuable possession perhaps of its owner! Then the money remaining in one corner of the chest is carefully counted and compared with the account in the register. If we look in we can see also here and there among the books other valuables of less peaceful character. There lie two or three daggers of more daggers, than ordinary workmanship, and by them a silver cup cups, &c. or two (p. 663), and again more than one hood lined with minever (p. 301). By this time a number of persons has collected around the chest, and the business begins. That man in an ordinary civilian's dress who stands beside Master Parys is John More, the University stationer (p. 629), and it is his office to fix the value of the pledges offered, and to take care that none are sold at less than their real value (p. 383). It is a motley group that stands around; there are several masters and bachelors, all dressed more or less as described above, but the larger proportion is of boys or quite young men in every variety of coloured dress, blue and red, medley, and the like, but without any academical dress (pp. 301, 360). Many of them are very scantily clothed (p. 684), and all have their attention rivetted on the chest, each with curious eye watching for his pledge, his book or his cup, brought from some country village, perhaps an old treasure of his family, and now pledged in his extremity, for last term he could not pay the principal of his hall the rent of his miserable garret, nor the manciple for his battels (pp. 527, 555), but now he is in funds again, and pulls from his leathern money-pouch at his girdle the coin which is to repossess him of his property. But among the group you may see one master whose bearing and dress plainly denote superior comfort and position; can he be here for the same purpose? Yes, it is Master Henry Sever, warden of Merton Hall (p. 531). presence is plainly regarded with disfavour and jealousy by the scholars, they think it not fair that the funds The borrowers, of the chest should be used by such as he; but he has influence, and lately he has been making some repairs in the buildings of Merton Hall, and he has borrowed from the Seltone chest, the extreme sum permitted by the ordinance, sixty shillings for that purpose (p. 216). He watches the proceedings, however, not without anxiety, for he had pledged a valuable illuminated missal far beyond the value he was to borrow, and he knows that his pledge may not be in the chest, for he omitted to redeem it at the proper time, and it was borrowed for inspection by an intending purchaser (p. 217), who had left a silver cup in its place, of more intrinsic value, by the stationer's decision, but not in Mr. Sever's eyes. His case is first gone into, and he is satisfied that he can probably effect an exchange again with the present possessor of his missal, so he walks away with the cup, and then the lesser applicants urge their claims, some redeem their pledges, some borrow fresh sums, some are new customers and sorrowfully deposit their treasures and slink sadly away, not without a titter from the more hardened bystanders, but before the iron lid closes again, and the bolts slide back, "Ye shall pray," says Master Parys, addressing the borrowers, "for the " soul of W. de Seltone and all the faithful departed." This concludes the business of the day.

Such may be taken probably, as a fair specimen of an ordinary transaction at the period we speak of. The large number of chests, each of which was monthly inspected, rendered such a ceremony of almost every day occurrence. For some of the particulars we have a little drawn on our imagination, but the names and dates are real, and the facts are possible and indeed probable, as will be seen by the reader if he refers to the pages of the work indicated. After thus dealing with what is tangible and matter of undoubted fact, it is distasteful to have to launch once again upon the uncertain; but we must not any longer defer giving a few minutes attention to the halls, which were so long nothing less than the University itself.

Enough has already been said of the halls supposed to have been founded by king Alfred to show that these really never had any existence; when the first halls were established must probably ever remain un between halls with foundations or allowances for scholars living therein, and the ordinary halls, otherwise called "Hostels," "Inns," "Entries." 1 The former are colleges, but were originally called halls along with the latter indiscriminately. After the foundation of W. of Durham, his example was followed to some extent by others; several houses, as has been noticed above, being bequeathed to the University, to be used as halls; and then the next step follows, the regular endowment of such houses. The remarks which are now to follow relate, however, only to the unendowed halls or inns. These were for two centuries, certainly from the conquest up to W. of Durham's foundation, and according to those who believe in the great antiquity of Oxford much earlier, the only provision for the residence of scholars at Oxford, excepting, of course, such schools as may have existed in the religious houses and which were maintained at their cost. The editor believes, as he has stated above, that the University took its rise from these schools; that in course of time scholars were attracted to Oxford who were not admitted into these schools but "boarded" at a sort of "dames' houses" in the city; and that those houses were the lineal ancestors of all the large family of halls which throve in the twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries.

statutes of the University of Paris.

The transition from mere grammar schools to a "studium generale," or, as we call it, an University, cannot be traced, the probability, however, almost amounting to a certainty, is that it was effected by a Adoption of the nearly wholesale adoption of the regulations of the University of Paris. Along with this transition naturally took place a reconstruction of the already existing boarding houses for scholars: doubtless it was found that such establishments were amenable to no proper controlling power, and the cause of grave irregularities; accordingly we find it provided by a statute of uncertain date, but which, as has already been said, is of a very early period, that a "mancipium" may not be principal of a hall (p. 463), again by another statute that the principal of a hall shall always be a graduate (p. 307), so late as the 15th century; by another that Control exerno scholar may dwell in the house of a layman, i.e., a cised by the University person not of the privilege of the University, and there-over the fore not subject to its authority (pp. 320, 279).

From these and from other similar enactments, which will occur to the reader, it is plain that the constant effort of the University was to bring under regular and fixed discipline the "hostels" for scholars which had long existed more or less outside its authority. No doubt a great step in this direction was effected by the corporate existence and large privileges granted by Henry III. Before that time the houses for scholars were let to the Halls rented clerks by the townsmen on their own terms, and ap-townsmen. parently with circumstances of extortion, thus we find (page 1) that the first idea of a penalty to be inflicted on the town was that the citizens should excuse the clerks half of their rent for a term of years; but afterwards the clerks appear to have got the matter very much into their own hands, for we find (p. 53) that one of the complaints made to the king (Anno 1290) is that the chancellor and scholars will not allow the townsmen to let their houses to scholars for a less term than ten years.

More details as to the regulation of the halls will occur to us when speaking of the condition of a scholar, but this appears to be the proper place in which to give some account of the position and tenure of the principals of such institutions. At what time they began to be such as is described is not clearly Mode and ceremony of qualifying for office of principal of halls definable as usual, but in the statutes of various dates here given, we find them usually to have been, though not invariably (p. 528), of the degree of Master of Arts at least; and the method of obtaining the office was very simple. On the 9th of September, every year (p. 15), the chancellor or his commissary (p. 522) took his place with all the usual solemnity in the church of Mary the Blessed Virgin, a bell being tolled as it would appear (p. 521) during the ceremony. Then those masters, who either desired to continue in their present principalship or to undertake the office for the future appeared before him, or else appointed another to do so in their stead, and deposited, each for the hall of which he proposed to be principal, a caution to insure the due payment of the rent, and apparently some tax payable to the University, though what that was, if any, we do not find. A similar method was adopted with respect to the schools (ibid), for which some one master was always responsible; these, however, would not have been all the schools, for only two or three are ever thus mentioned along with the halls (see Lists of It would seem that the University was Halls, Index). responsible for the payment of the rent to the owners of the halls and these particular schools, and that the principals deposited cautions for their payment of rent to the University.

Having thus secured possession of their halls, their object, of course, was to fill them, since the matter was purely a pecuniary speculation, the scholars who lived with them paying the principals for their rooms and lectures as in our times (17, 426, 555, 600), for in the fifteenth century, at any rate, and there is no reason to suppose that every year, and it would appear that at that time, 1438-1460, a term of four years was the usual duration.

the practice began then, we find that the scholars were obliged to hear lectures in their own halls from their principal, or other lecturer appointed by him, in addition to the attendance at the schools. Of the amount of these payments notice will be taken in the sequel, when speaking of the scholars.

From what has been said it will be a fair presumption The principals that these principals were usually men of some learning of halls. and academical distinction, at least in the time of which we are now speaking (1450). As to their tenure of office, we have seen it was originally presumed to be annual, but it was quite common to hold the office for many years, and also, as will be seen on comparing the lists of halls given in Part II., for a principal to change from one hall to another, which he supposed would answer better, for having a better situation or better rooms, &c. Although, however, these principals Their office of halls were thus to a considerable degree independent, and tenure. yet they were most distinctly and strictly subject to general regulations, and, especially, they could be deprived absolutely, and, as it seems, without investigation, by the chancellor or his commissary, for which proceeding there was a proper form (p. 470). Further, they were obliged to reside in their halls (p. 360), and in case of absence to appoint a deputy; to report disorderly scholars to the Chancellor, to keep a list of their scholars, to read to them the aularian statutes three times every year (p. 358), along with other peculiar duties, which will be readily found by the reader on reference to the index of this work. Perhaps, what will strike us Curious qualias most singular is that it was thought necessary to fications for. provide by statute that no "mancipium," (i.e., a servant who catered also for the scholars) should be principal of a hall, even though he were a scholar himself (p. 468), but it was by no means unusual for a person in the condition of a servant to be at the same time a scholar, and regularly attending his lectures (pp. 656, 661).

Number of halls exaggerated.

Before leaving the subject a few words should be said of the probable number of these halls. Among the other extravagances, which have been repeated for the purpose of enhancing the reputation of the University, must be reckoned the statement of Richard of Armagh, that there were in the thirteenth century, 30,000 scholars at Oxford. It is apparent from the known boundaries of the city at the time, that this is next to impossible, and, certainly, quite incredible. Explanations have been attempted, to the effect that under "scholars" is here intended to be reckoned the whole number of persons who could claim the privilege of the University (see pp. 52, 346). And that this number included all clerks also of whatever age living at Oxford, and that there were no public or other grammar schools except here and at Cambridge, in England, so that all the youth of the kingdom were educated at these two places. But no sort of ground for rating the numbers at so great an amount really exists; on the contrary, it is probable that, of scholars properly so called, the sum stated divided by five would give a far more true approximation to the reality; to these may, perhaps, be added nearly as many more members of the privilege, but not students. At any rate, in the evidences we possess, we find no more than about eighty halls; from the remains of such as now exist, and there are several, we cannot put their inhabitants at more than an average of thirty, and this is, it is likely, a very high average to allow. This, the outside number of students which we can allow even in the most flourishing period of the history of the University, would suppose the existence of at least double the number of halls known to have been in use at any one time. This is a wide margin, and would fairly include the whole number, probably at no time very large, of students not residing in any hall. In the year 1503, these halls had decreased to fifty, and in 1511, to only twenty-six, so rapid was the decrease and absorption by the colleges. Of the various vicissitudes in the numbers of the University, and therefore, of the halls, no detailed account can be given here; war and pestilence more than once drove away almost every scholar from the place: nor again can we find room for a topographical inquiry. These matters, along with others of a more general or antiquarian interest, must find another place.

Probable real number.

It would seem to follow naturally next to mention Clerks claimed Very early we find the scholars to have a right to use any house as a the schools. had the right of demanding any house from its owner school. for this use, to be rented at a sum fixed by regular valuers (pp. 13, 14, 156), and some of the earliest bequests to the University were employed in purchasing other houses to be used as schools; perhaps these so purchased may have been the few schools mentioned above as enumerated along with the halls (p. 46). The number of houses so used doubtless varied as the halls, but we find that at one time there were thirty-two such schools The schools in in one street called "School-street" (p. 240), and there School-street; their number, would probably be a few more in other localities. schools were divided among the several faculties, and in them took place all public lectures and disputations and other exercises for degrees (ibid. and p. 274). Whether the thirty-two schools above named occupied the site of the whole of the present eastern front of Brasenose (except that part of it which we know consisted of old University Hall) as well as the opposite side of the street where now the Radcliffe Library stands, or whether there were other buildings intermixed with the schools does not appear; the only interest attaching probable size, to the inquiry is that upon its answer would depend arrangements. in a great degree our estimate of the size of the schools. The editor inclines to the opinion that there were other buildings also there, and for this reason,—the accommodation in the said thirty-two schools must have been small and insufficient, otherwise the present schools (called at first the New Schools) would never have been considered an improvement, and if so then the houses in which the schools were must have been small. seems most likely that each house or school contained more than one, perhaps several chambers used for this purpose, as lecture-rooms in fact, by the master who occupied them. Every master at his "inception" (i.e. on commencing the exercise of his newly-acquired right of lecturing) was obliged to be provided with a school for that purpose (p. 415). Now, as inception with the course of lectures succeeding it occupied the remainder of the current year and the whole of that succeeding, the number of inceptors lecturing at one time must have been greatly above thirty-two in all the faculties together. We may, therefore, fairly presume that each "school" was in fact several schools; and each several school was occupied by its own master with his audience of scholars. The remarks above made are not intended to apply to the "grammar schools;" it is possible that some of the thirty-two schools above mentioned may have been used at times for this purpose, but it would appear that the grammar schools were distinct (p. 363) and of an inferior and subordinate character, liable to inspection by two Masters of Arts deputed for that purpose (p. 85), and not unfrequently taught by other than graduates (p. 87), who were, however, always obliged to be licensed for that purpose (p. 436). More may be said of these when speaking of the studies of the University; we will now glance at the condition and earliest known establishment of the libraries.

The first library of the University.

Of the first library known to have existed at Oxford, the editor finds nothing in the MSS which have come within his reach; in the well-known work of Richard of Durham (Philobiblon, ch. 13 and 14) will be found an account of this library, originally established by the monks of Durham, at their house for their scholars, which stood where Trinity College now is. Beyond what is stated in the work alluded to, nothing further is, it is supposed, possible to be discovered. It appears that this library only preceded the next institution of the kind by about 35 years, for Thomas Cobham, Bishop The Cobham of Worcester, who died in 1327, left a large number of library. books to the University, and of these we have some account in the present volume (p. 222). The original MS. of the statute for the regulation of this library is lost, but it is preserved, as usual, by a copy in the MSS. A., B., and C. This statute provides that the books Statute for. shall be chained in convenient order in the "soler" or upper chamber over the old congregation house, already mentioned as the store-house of all the University's property; it likewise provides for the salary of a librarian, called the chaplain, whose office it was to have the care of the books, and to pray for the soul of the founder. It is plain, from a statute relating the "Chest of four keys," (p. 152) that there were also other books belonging to the University, besides those already spoken of, and which were kept in chests, and, as it would seem lent upon indenture or depositing pledges (p. 323), in the same way as we have described to have been done in the case of other chests, to scholars wishing to read them. It was also not an uncommon thing for a person to bequeath or otherwise give a book or books (p. 270), to be chained in the chancel of a church, for the express use of the scholars, and to be inspected regularly by the chancellor and proctors, to secure it from injury. Thus were the scholars supplied with books,—and, it would appear, thus only, except by possessing them themselves, which not many would be able to do, or at least not to the extent of more than a volume or two, and the majority probably had not any at all,—until that great, and to the University of that time, almost unspeakable blessing, the donations of Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester. already described, we have the outpouring of the gratitude of their hearts. No epithets of praise and adulation are too high or too low for "vestra humillima " oratrix, cætus Magistrorum regentium Oxoniæ," (such in the almost invariable style,) to use in addressing the executors. There was, it seems from the correspondence, a very considerable difficulty and delay in obtaining possession of some of the books, and when they actually came to hand, the general joy knew no bounds. had made many valuable presents of books during his lifetime, which are gratefully remembered in the statutes for the library (pp. 261, 266, 326), the whole number being certainly more than 300, if we include the smaller donations (p. 327) which he gave from time to time, besides the two of which catalogues will be found in this work, (p. 758), and after his death there was a further very large addition. Of all these books, a donation of which it may with truth be said, that it did more for the University than any other benefaction before or after it has done, only one is supposed to be now remaining in the Bodleian library! It is not a little instructive, as exhibiting the tastes and studies of the period, to inspect these catalogues. The contents would hardly be thought valuable, except as curiosities, by a student of the present day. A very large proportion are theological works, with a less number of mathematical, medical, and astronomical. Not a few copies of parts of Aristotle (translations it would appear), but of other classical authors only a few. We find, however, copies of Cicero, Seneca, Cato moralizatus, Pliny, Quintilian; one copy of Plato, one of Suetonius, one of Æschines, one of Livy, one of Ovid; of Greek classics none beside Æschines, unless we except the portions of Aristotle and the copy of Plato, and these were probably Latin translations. It is surprising to find that English chronicles are almost unrepresented (Capgrave and the Polychronicon being the only specimens), and that of the works of Petrarch and Boccaccio there are very numerous copies. and of Dante more than one.1 For a more careful analysis of the catalogue the reader must refer to the document for himself. We will proceed to notice briefly the regulations for the use of the library, made before these books were given, but continuing to regulate its management, until the foundation of the Bodleian(p. 261). There are three principal statutes regulating the library, the first (p. 226) for the Cobham Library; the next made in the year 1412, on what special occasion does not appear, but probably in consequence of recent donations of books by the chancellor at the time, Richard Courtenay, and others there specified as benefactors (p. 266); the third on the occasion of the great donation by Humphrey Duke of Gloucester, in the year 1439 (p. 326). The provisions of the first statute were Statute for The chaplain's regulation of library. considerably modified by the second. (or librarian's) stipend was very considerably increased, and he appears to have become one of the principal officers of the University; very stringent clauses bind Payment and the proctors to pay him his stipend regularly, lest he should become disgusted at the tardiness of his remuneration, and consequently neglect the books under his care, and it was further provided that every beneficed perquisites of graduate should on his inception present the chaplain librarian. with clothes (p. 263), as was customary in the case of the bedels (ibid., and p. 324), for it is quaintly observed, it would be absurd that one who is adorned with superior dignity should have inferior privileges (p. 263). After providing for the safe custody of the books, the next thing was to declare who should use them; and it would seem that experience had in this case, as usual, brought wisdom; for, whereas in the ordinance for the Cobham Library it is permitted to all scholars to have free access to the books at proper times, in the second ordinance we find that no one was to be allowed to use the library except graduates or religious, and the latter only under a restriction that they must be of eight years' standing "in philosophia," a rule which was strictly observed, for we read (p. 751) that a monk of the name of Hardwyke was only allowed to use this privilege after obtaining a "grace" for the purpose, and even then his permission did not extend beyond one term. These at first sight appear unnecessarily stringent rules, but it must be remembered that nongraduates were of a different class from what we might expect from our modern experience; probably many of them mere boys, and, what is worse, very dirty boys, and as to the monks, the intention in so limiting their admission doubtless was that more room and greater facilities for study should be available for masters and bachelors, who had not, as many of the religious houses had, libraries of their own to which they could resort, and further, the size of the room in which the books were kept was, or rather is, not by any means adapted for large numbers of students. those days of scarcity of books some hard-reading monk might sit hour after hour and day after day, and completely monopolize some sole copy of a useful work, or the dirty fingers of some ragged scholar utterly ruin a precious illumination. A solemn oath, moreover, was exacted from all graduates on admission to their degree (pp. 265, 375) that they would use the books "modo " honesto et pacifico nulli librorum, per-turpitudinem " aut rasuras alolitionesve foliorum, præjudicium in-" ferendo." The health of the librarian was not forgotten; he was to be allowed a month's absence, lest he should languish from constant residence, and the hours during which the library was to be open were to be from 9 till 11 o'clock a.m., and from 1 till 4

As you entered the room you would see a large board hung against the wall, on which were written the names of Commemoraall the books in the library, and the names also of factors. the donors, lest "oblivion, the step-mother of memory, " should pluck from our breasts the memory of our " benefactors," as the statute has it (p. 267); for the better remembrance of whose gifts solemn mass " of the " Holy Ghost" was thrice to be said, and once a " requiem" mass every quarter of the year at the altar of S. Katherine in the church of the Blessed Virgin. Careful was the ordinance also to enjoin that the books should be closed and also the windows of the library every night (p. 267). The third statute for the library need not be so fully noticed. It makes special provision that the books shall not be removed from the library, with certain particular exceptions (p. 327), and that the memory of the donor shall be celebrated while he lives and after his death for ever, by the customary appointment of masses and proper collects, as in the case of the founders of the several chests (supra, p. 38). Here we must take our leave of the library.

Having described the main institutions of the University, omitting any separate account of the foundations of the several colleges, which forms no part of our plan, and which can be found elsewhere along with the peculiar objects of their founders,-

We now go on to speak of those for whom the University existed, its members; of their lives and occupations, their several studies and duties, so far as they are illustrated or explained in the contents of this volume. Of the relation of the University to the State, of its connexion with the church and antagonism to the regular clergy, there are, as will be expected, numerous evidences in the documents here printed. It will, however, be at once perceived that to attempt any satisfactory investigation of these things would, though interesting in the extreme, carry us out of our necessary limits; they are subjects which belong to a history of the University in relation to the general history of England, and must with regret be omitted here; even to trace the connexion of those events of the kind, which are to be found in the present volume, with the history of the time, would occupy more space than we have to give to the whole of the present introduction. Whatever facts of such history are in the documents now printed can be readily referred to, it is hoped, by means of the index.

Meaning of the terms "scholar,"

In dealing with our next subject we will begin with the scholars, and then in order proceed to the several graduates, and lastly, if space permits, to the officers of the University. And, on the threshold, we must caution those who may need the information, that the term "scholar" is one of ambiguous meaning; in its largest sense it is sometimes used even to include all members of the University being actual students, unless perhaps the chancellor was excepted (pp. 344-8), and is in such cases to be understood as equivalent to the more usual term "clerk." In its more technical sense "scholar" means one "in statu pupillari," or, perhaps, those under the rank of Bachelor of Arts, though this degree is hardly recognised as such. And it is necessary, in order to understand the documents relating to medieval Oxford, to remember that in those times men were divided into "laymen" and "clerks," a distinction more nearly equivalent to "town" and "gown" of modern times than any other the editor can suggest. And in this division "clerks" would be taken to include all servants of clerks and other members of the privilege, whose interests naturally were one with the actual students; some of whom were, as has been said, students also themselves, and who by virtue of their dependence on the "clerks" proper, were in a state of chronic antagonism to the "laymen" or "town" and its authorities. And to avoid the necessity of recurring again to the explanation of these terms, it should here be also mentioned that the title "Master" did not, as "master," and now it does, signify only a Master of Arts, but was "doctor." used generally to denote one who had taken the highest degree in any faculty, and is often, therefore, used indifferently with that of "doctor." "Master" William of Durham is an instance.

Perhaps, the simplest way of dealing with this subject The academical will be to trace the whole course of a scholar from the lar sketched. time of his leaving his home to the completion of his academical course. In attempting this, the editor would fain claim indulgence for advancing occasionally statements which are not literally matters of fact, but are nevertheless, he believes, in substance correct.

At the outset, we are met by a difficulty of no slight magnitude, the question, namely, of age. At what age did students repair to Oxford in, we will say, the fifteenth century? There would appear to have been wonderfully little real change in the condition or studies of the students during the whole period treated of in this volume; occasionally modifications of the necessary studies, &c., and increased endowments, were made, but the statute books, beyond these, inform us of little else that will render the remarks which we shall make as to the fifteenth century less applicable to the fourteenth or thirteenth.

There is no doubt whatever, that the boys, as a rule, Age at which resorted to the University at a very early age, earlier sorted to probably, than is usually supposed; and yet there ap-Oxford.

pears to have been no statutable limit as to age, so that it may be assumed as certain that, while the majority would go at the age of from ten to twelve years, (i.e., supposing them to commence their education at Oxford, of which more will be said shortly), there would be found also a large number of more mature age. The difficulty which occurs is then, how to account for the numerous occasions on which we find scholars punished for such offences as bearing weapons (p. 91, and passim, see Scholars), turbulence, sueing-at-law (p. 302), engaging in merchandise and having children (p. 346), buying and selling victuals (p. 468), robbing with violence (p. 531), along with other delinquencies too numerous to mention, but all plainly proving that the offenders were not young boys!

In the first place, it will be remembered that the term "scholar" is to be taken as sometimes including-all clerks, though more generally, it is used in our own sense, as equal to non-graduate members of the University; but, without the extension admitted by this larger meaning, it will be clear from what shall be now said that even the term "scholar," in our modern acceptation of its meaning, will include all ages, and in considerable numbers of every age, from their tenth or twelfth to their twentieth year.

Let us suppose then, that a yeoman's son, to his father's vexation, for he thinks but meanly of book-learning, shows no aptitude for the plough or for the sword, but is somewhat paler and feebler than his brothers and takes more pleasure in an old illuminated missal, that lies on the shelf, than in country pursuits or boyish sports, and is often to be found persuading the chaplain at the squire's or the priest of the parish to instruct him a little in the mysterious art of reading. It is clear, of course, that the child is fit for nothing else, he must be made a clerk of

The only material impediment is the pecuniary aspect of the case, but, supposing that to be surmounted, due inquiries are made of the nearest authority on such things, and it is resolved that the boy shall go to Oxford. He is eleven years of age, and now the Michaelmas term, his parents find, is just about to commence. The Arrangements first thing to manage is the journey, but this is an easier for the journey thing than may be thought, for at the nearest town versity. every autumn, about the first day of October, there is to be found at the hostelry, a man, who will manage all this without difficulty and for no very exorbitant charge; he is a "fetcher" of scholars "to and fro the University." (p. 346.) Term begins on S. Denis' day (9th of October), and it will take a week to ride to Oxford, and the new scholars will require a day or two after their arrival to get settled in their halls. The "fetcher" has already been two or three days on the road, for he has a regular route, which he takes every year, and at each town he comes to he picks up one or two boys, so that already he has a troop of eight or ten, which will be swelled, perhaps, to twenty or more by the time he reaches his destination at the "Cardinalls Hatte" inn, at Oxford (p. 685). Some of the boys are also attended by their own servants (p. 346), so that altogether the cavalcade is a considerable one, mounted and armed (p. 91), for protection against violence.

If the reader is curious as to the expenses of the Expenses of journey, he will find that it could be performed, in-journey. cluding beds, and even wine and expenses of horse, at the rate of about fivepence a head each day, and probably this sum would be very much reduced in the case of boys, poor scholars, who would surely have no wine, probably no fire or candles, all which are included in the above estimate (see Appendix, p. 793), so that we may probably set down the expenses at not more than twopence half-penny or threepence a day, or perhaps even less; a sum which, however, is not so insignificant as may at first sight appear.

Approach to the city.

General view of Oxford.

Various estimates have been made of the relative value of money at that time, as compared with that of the present day; in speaking of the expenses of scholars, we shall have an opportunity for further remarks on this interesting subject. We will suppose the journey safely accomplished; the entrance into Oxford, and its first view caught from the neighbouring hill, as the party ride over Shotover, down the "Horse-" path," through the thick forest, and across the moor to the east gate of the city, the first impression it creates, the challenging of the party at the gate by the sentinels, the passage of the Cherwell, probably by fording, and other such details must be left to the imagination of the reader. So also must, to a very great extent, the appearance of the city itself; of the buildings now existing at Oxford, which were standing at the time we speak of, and which would strike the eye of the stranger, there were few. He would not see at his entrance the tower of Magdalen College (built about 1473), the old Hospital of St. John was then standing, and used for some years by the new College which displaced its tenants. He would, however, see the spires of S. Mary's and of old All Saints', and the tower of S. John's (Merton) churches. These, with the tower of New College, and the spire of The tower of Oseneye S. Frideswide alone remain. Abbey (of which a print can be seen in Dugdale's Monasticon, was also to be seen in the western distance. Doubtless the Masters of the several halls, to which our new scholars are to go, will be expecting their arrival, and, the horses being disposed of at the inn, their slender luggage is removed to its appointed destination.

We would gladly linger a little on the picture fancy here presents to us, but it would be mere fancy, to so great an extent have all means of actually reproducing mediæval life perished. To mention one thing only which strikes The commenceus, and shows how utterly all details of life are lost, we ment of term. can hardly conceive what must have been the effect of the arrival of so large a number of men and horses in the town as must have occurred at this time every year, how the latter were returned, or, if not, where and when sold, and whence provided again, are perhaps trivial inquiries, but they open to the thought scenes of interest and means of employment which might otherwise pass unobserved, and which, moreover, may assist us perhaps in forming a juster conception of the life we attempt to pourtray. The amount of buying and selling, for in-Busy state of stance, necessarily attending the transactions of which the city. we speak, and the consequent litigation likely to spring from it, may, among other things, contribute towards accounting for the great frequency and activity of law- Frequency of suits of which there is evidence in the documents litigation. before us, and for which so very large a machinery existed, it would appear, at Oxford; but of this more will be said hereafter.

We do not propose to watch the distribution of our party of scholars among the several halls to which they went, we will follow one, however, as well as we can: he is one of the youngest, and his case therefore will be somewhat different from those of the elder. was to commence his education at Oxford. And to understand this matter aright, we must not any longer delay adding somewhat to our previous account of the The short notice given above (p. 46) of those institutions, was meant to apply to the schools of the several higher faculties only, and of them it was by no means intended to be a complete account; besides them, The scholar there existed many other schools, for instance, every enters a gram-mar school.

religious house had, it would appear, its own schools, in which its members performed all their academical exercises previous to inception, there were also other schools in various parts of the town, the locality of which is not known; but, besides all these, there were also schools of a wholly distinct character, the grammar Of these, as of the schools of the several faculties, there were two classes; those of the University properly so called, and those of the various religious So that it will be seen that each such religious house had a school for every purpose, grammar, as well as the higher faculties, to a great extent independent of the University and yet a part of it and subject to its general regulations and partaking of its privileges.

Religious and secular.

Thus there lay an option before the friends of a youth designed for Oxford; they could either entrust him wholly to a religious house, under which circumstances he would probably be reared to swell the ranks of the regular clergy; and in this case, on his arrival in Oxford, he would go at once, under charge of a brother, to the house and be placed, if of the age we selected, under the care of the grammar master of the house, and afterwards proceed to other studies still in the same house, or he would be placed, and this was by far the commoner plan, at one of the grammar schools of the University, i.e., the secular schools. Then comes the question where and children lodge? how he would live: were children destined to attend such grammar schools entered as members of one of the halls, or were they under charge of a sort of "dame:" or were the halls of two classes, some of these halls for boys at grammar schools only, and some for more advanced faculty-scholars? We have no decided evidence on this subject, but it seems most likely that the latter was the case, that, in fact, some of the halls were grammar-halls, and contained amongst their apartments a grammar school. It did not follow as a matter of course that this plan was wholly exclusive of the other, any more than it followed that, though the majority of the grammar masters were graduates, all should be so (pp. 436-9). Clearly that non-graduates Graduate and should be grammar-school masters was the exception non-graduate teachers, and not the rule; and it may fairly be presumed that. since the whole tenor of legislation was to bring members of the University more and more within its own supervision and control, in this case as in others the exercise of non-academical authority even over the very young would be regarded with a jealous eye by the authorities.

The existence of non-graduate teachers of grammar at all seems to have arisen from a scarcity of duly qualified persons willing to undertake the office in the face of the greater attractions of logic, and of the superior faculties; hence the foundation of free grammar schools (p. 354), a species of institution then in its infancy, and encouraged by a peculiar exempting statute at Oxford. The difficulty of providing proper secular graduates for this important service, led also to the usurpation (so to speak) of grammar-school pre-eminence so notoriously acquired and exercised by the Augustine friars; who, perhaps from their success in this line, appear to have eventually succeeded in drawing to themselves with the consent of the University, nearly all the grammatical training of the place (pp. 363, 411, 749), a success the memory of which has been handed down almost to our times, at least by the familiarity of the term, in the well known name, "Austins." Whether "Austin" friars. the success of these friars as grammar teachers laid the foundation of their eminence in other branches of learning or accompanied it does not appear certain, but the statutes referred to seem to make the former probable.

A non-graduate schoolmaster selected.

the University.

We will suppose our scholar consigned to the care of a famous schoolmaster of the day (1450), apparently one of strong feelings antagonistic to the regulars. John Martyn (or Merton) kept a school in the parish of S. Michael, not far from the prison Bocardo, and in this very year during the long vacation (p. 601) he had been imprisoned in the said prison for assembling his scholars and violently tearing from the hands of the priest a sentence of excommunication at S. Mary's church; a few years after we find him quarrelling with a regular priest of S. Mary's College (Oriel) and sub-His position in mitting to arbitration, the sentence of which forbade him and his wife to make faces at their enemy or otherwise insult him. A strange prohibition, but apparently not unfrequently needed, for in an old MS in the possession of Oriel College there is an account of a particular injunction to restrain one of the fellows from annoying the Provost by indulging in a similar species of insult. However, no doubt the ill blood between Master Martyn and his opponent cooled down as they discussed together the roast goose and wine, which the sentence of arbitration (p. 713) obliged them to provide and consume together in amity, not omitting beer "ad libitum sive " voluntatem," within the precincts of the college of the Blessed Virgin aforesaid; nor would either the one " fracas" or the other in the least diminish the reputation of our schoolmaster. To this protector we will conduct our scholar.

Entrance and enrolment of the scholar.

The first step will be to enrol his name on the list of some master of arts, for John Martyn was not a graduate, and all scholars of non-graduate teachers were obliged to enter their names on the roll of some master of arts, a regulation the nonobservance of which would deprive a scholar "tam " morte quam in vita" of all privilege and protection of the University (p. 449), and which was doubtless felt as an irksome restraint and a reminder of their academical inferiority by the non-graduate teachers, who were liable at any time to be proceeded against by any master who found them to fail in compliance. (p. 445). We need look no further for the grievance of John Martyn.

It should here be remarked that though in the earlier Residence in part of the time embraced in the present work all lay-houses the origin of grave scholars might dwell in the houses of laymen, or at disorders, least did so, if they pleased, though not allowed, yet, at the time of which we are treating now, the exemption in favour of lay-houses can only have existed in the case of the grammar scholars; for in the year 1421 the king, alarmed at the frequent violations of the peace at Oxford, issued an ordinance (p. 277) which required all scholars and servants of years of discretion to be under some sufficient principal; and further, the University, in the year 1432, ordered that every such principal should be a graduate (p. 307); and under the same year we find similar restrictions imposed with more severity by the University; and a complaint in the preamble of the statute (p. 320) and source of that grave crimes are committed by scholars falsely continual so called, who "nefando nomine chamberdekenys" live University. in no hall, but sleep away their days and pass their nights in riot and debauchery, crime and violence. This was an evil not eradicated, however, by royal or academical legislation; for, several years later, (pp. 563, 576) we find the same class of scholars "unattached" banished from the University for homicide. It seems indeed that the plan of living in lay-houses, in the case of elder students, was so grave an evil during all the early history of the University, that it was the subject of constant anxiety and statute-making, and doubtless was one of the chief reasons which finally led to the complete success of the collegiate system.

But to return to our scholar;—his name is duly entered on the list of some master; next, for though it need not necessarily be done for a month after coming to Oxford (p. 277), yet it is likely it would be done almost immediately, followed the (at this time) novel ceremony of matriculation.

No control over scholars in early times.

In the early times there seems to have been positively no sort of restriction or restraint imposed on or exercised over the scholars, they dwelt where they chose and with whom, and were under no kind of obligation, beyond such as the fear of the arm of the law ecclesiastical or civil might supply, to a regular or moral life in any degree; but the intolerable licence which developed itself from this state of things, of which the reader will best form an opinion by consulting the index to the present volume under the words Scholar, Prison, Violence, and the like, gradually led to the passing, step by step, of statutes which were intended to, and did to a great extent, abate so serious an evil.

Matriculation.

His matriculation was a very simple process, for it consisted merely of an oath to keep the peace (p. 279), and, if he had a servant, the servant took the same oath (p. 664). All further oaths were reserved for a future time, the taking of each academical degree was hedged about with most stringent oaths, of which a more detailed account will be found in the proper place. The young scholar's real matriculation, or what more resembles the matriculation of more recent times, was, perhaps, his enrolment on the books of his protecting master, by which he became entitled to claim the privilege of the University.

No academical dress worn by under-graduates. As to the dress in which the boy would appear, it did not differ from that of any other boy of his age, no academical dress being worn by non-graduate members of the privilege until very much more recent times. 1 So true is it that what is withheld as a privilege will be valued and eagerly sought, while what is enforced as a regulation will be strenuously resisted; for in our days the complaint is that the junior members of the University reject the badge of academical citizenship, while in the times we at present speak of, stringent were the statutes and severe the penalties required to restrain the ambitious sophist from induing himself with the robes which were the sacred privilege of those only who had "climbed to the " summit of" a master's or bachelor's dignity (pp. 301, 360, 208).

All the formal steps necessary to effect membership have now been taken, and our scholar returns to his schoolmaster's house; of the details of the arrangements of such an institution we can absolutely say nothing which is certainly true, of the elder scholar's mode of life we know more, we may therefore reserve what is to be said of the "camera" or scholars' room for a time, and proceed to the first lecture.

In the room which we will dignify with the name of school, the scholars are assembled, they sit or stand in a group around the master, without desks or, generally, books. A good illustration, of a rough Description of and inartistic kind, of this scene in a scholar's life is probably to be seen in the rude woodcut or print, which the curious may see for themselves at the commencement of some of the earliest printed books, one, which the editor specially has in his eye, is the early edition of Boëthius' "De Consolatione Philo-

"sophiæ," printed by the well known J. Breda, of Daventry (Anno 1490), in which will be found such a scene as we are supposing exhibited, disfigured of course by the usual absence of perspective and the grotesque angularity of figure common to mediæval art, but nevertheless sufficiently like the reality to reproduce the main features of the scene; the scholars there depicted are plainly very young; and from the mouth, or round the head of the central figure (the editor speaks from memory) runs a scroll "accipies tanti doctoris" dogmata sancti." The figure teaching doubtless is intended for Boëthius himself, but, as usual, it must be supposed that the whole conception of the print and details, so far as it has any, are derived not, of course, from his time but from those of the printer of the work.

Matter and manner of lecture.

We proceed to the matter treated of in the lecture, and here we need be in no uncertainty either as to the subject, the text books, or the mode of instruction. For the purpose of arranging the system of instruction to be pursued during the ensuing term the grammar-school masters used to hold a meeting called "convenite" at the beginning of term, and also at the end, and at other times when necessary, that they might act together in concert; a wholesome regulation which we do not find to have existed in the case of other faculties (p. 437). Every such master before being licensed to teach underwent an examination in versification, dictation, &c. (p. 436), lest, as the statute has it, the words of Isaiah should prove true "multiplicasti gentem, non auxisti lætitiam;" further, they were held to be responsible for the moral and religious training of their pupils (ibid.), "cum " oporteat singulos pro sibi commisso grege coram " tremendo Judice rationem reddere in die tribula-"tionis et miseriæ;" a provision which goes far to prove the correctness of what has been above advanced, that the boys resided in the houses of their masters.

Moral and religious instruction.

The first meeting of the scholars in the school would no doubt be for the purpose of having the statutes relating to them read and explained (p. 437). subject of the lectures we are told that there was a great tendency to neglect proper formal instruction, especially in the matter of parsing, so that we find more than one statute expressly forbidding what were called "cursory" lectures (pp. 86, 439) except under certain Cursory restrictions. What these "cursory" lectures were we can lectures. only conjecture, probably they were more what we should call lectures while the "ordinary" lectures were actual lessons; in the cursory lecture the master was the sole performer, in the ordinary the scholar was heard his lesson. The most remarkable part of the statute alluded to is that it complains that teachers led by the hope of gain indulged their scholars with cursory lectures, so that it would really seem that it was not uncommon for the boys to bribe the master to excuse them their parsing! So great an evil did this prove, as well it might do, that a master so transgressing was liable to deprivation, and imprisonment for so long as the chancellor saw fit in his discretion (p. 87).

The "positive" and formal instruction of the scholars consisted, we have seen, in great measure of parsing in Latin; Greek is never mentioned, and was never taught. Greek not The master was also obliged (p. 437) to set his scholars verses to compose, and letters to write, with express Details of caution as to choice of words, length of clauses, and method of instruction. absence of metaphor, &c. (p. 438), which exercises they had to write out on parchment on the next holiday, and produce them in school and repeat them "by heart" to their master on the day after. Thus we find that really very ample provisions existed for proper grammatical training. The text book used appears to have been in- Text books variably Priscian or Donatus (p. 439, 243), the rules of which were to be illustrated from authors of a proper kind, special care being taken to forbid the use of the amatory portions of Ovid and of Pamphilus, and any other books whose contents "suos scholares alliceret ad "illicita vel provocaret." One other branch of instruction provided for must not be passed over unmentioned, it is that the boys should be taught to construe both in English and French, lest the latter language should be wholly forgotten. The statute in which this precaution is taken (p. 438) is unfortunately of the number of those which are of utterly uncertain date, so far as can be ascertained from the MSS., it is however not one of the ancient statutes on grammar schools, and is probably of the thirteenth century.

The French language.

It should be observed once more of the grammar masters before leaving this subject, that while we find provision made by statute for their payment by their scholars, the two superintendent masters also, whose duty it was to inspect and regulate the grammar schools, had a regular salary from the University (p. 440); the non-graduate grammar teacher's salary was also limited (p. 439), and they were obliged to make an annual payment to the University, as it would seem for the privilege of teaching, and the sum so collected (p. 440) was divided among the superintendents, at least such would appear to be the meaning of the statute, which is somewhat obscurely worded; and not seldom there was great difficulty in collecting these dues, for we find (p. 563) in the year 1447 three such teachers threatened with excommunication for withholding pay-This exaction of a tax from the schoolmasters seems to point once more to the conclusion already stated that the masters lived by keeping boarding schools, and were paid in a different way from, and in a more remunerative way than the teachers of the other faculties, to which we must now proceed.

No maximum limit (p. 286) seems to have been pre-Duration of scribed to the time which would be spent in the previous grammatical training. grammatical training above sketched, nor is there any reason to suppose that there practically existed any limit, beyond that which convenience would impose, either to the age at which boys commenced, or at which they relinquished the work of elementary education; as a matter of convenience and custom they would be generally of the age we have presumed, and we may suppose that from two to four years would be the ordinary duration of their schooling, while on the other hand, some would enter considerably later and therefore finish also later. Again, a large number of students would not have studied grammar at all at Oxford, but would have prepared themselves elsewhere.

Allowing, then, for the variety of the means for pre- Age at which vious training, we shall see that the age at which the the regular course of an real University course would commence will have varied Artist would very much; we may set it down as from the twelfth to commence. the fifteenth or sixteenth year; and again there were very considerable numbers of students who graduated without ever passing regularly through the academical course, and who were allowed to count "pro forma" exercises and studies undergone elsewhere; numerous instances of which will be found in the extracts from the register of Convocation (A a) in this work.

his course of training as an "Artist." He will therefore have to be transferred to a hall or college, (but as the latter were at present exclusively for limited foundations. the former will be the ordinary course), and thus be placed under the supervision of a principal. He has no great distance to walk to the famous Broadgate's Hall,1 in All Saints parish, presided over at this time by one Master William Sprig. This was a famous hall and enjoyed the valuable privilege of sanctuary, so that on one occasion, a few years later, an unfortunate tailor (p. 703) having wounded another in a brawl fled hither for refuge, and defied the power of the proctor by whom he was hotly pursued.

We will take leave to accompany our scholar into the hall, he is introduced into the study of the principal there, to have his name duly enrolled; while this ceremony is going on we will take the opportunity of looking round the study of Master Sprig; -it does not reach our notions of ordinary comfort, but it is a fair specimen of the class (p. 515). It is a small room without, of course, any covering on the floor, and not over-The principal's stocked with furniture. The first thing that strikes the eye is, that hanging against the wall there are to be seen several articles which appear hardly consistent with our notions of academical life,—a bow, and twenty arrows arranged near; a sword, two baslards or daggers, an axe, an old guitar, and a lute; knives too of considerable ornament he possessed; on the floor is the usual chest locked,2 the equivalent for modern cupboards and drawers; one chair, and it seems, one only was the usual stock, though occasionally we find "formula" mentioned, probably for scholars to sit on at the lectures (p. 545), from which we may conclude that the principal's study was his lecture room also; there is one three-legged table, and one desk to read at, and an old shelf, some wooden dishes, a pestle and mortar, a brass pitcher, and a pair of bellows, an article generally to be found in such apartments, for the occupant had the privilege of a fire. and apparently did a little cooking for himself (p. 704); these complete the furniture. Of books there are not many, Boëthius, Super libro Porphyrii, the commentary of Boëthius on the prædicaments; Ovid, "De remedio " amoris;" liber geometriæ, probably in most cases we should add a few books on law, canon or civil, or on theology, which with a prayer book (portiforium), would be found to complete the library (p. 545). There is nothing to hinder us from prying even into his bed-room (camera, p. 545). He is well provided with blankets, and bed-room. he has four, some of them very heavy it would seem, for these are very valuable, appraised at twenty pence each, one coverlet of "say," four cloths of the same material, for what use is not so clear, one doublet of white cloth. one pair of boots, one red gown trimmed with fur, another lividi coloris similarly trimmed, one red hood, a tabard, and a white cloak. This is his whole property, as it would seem,—bedstead and crockery may have belonged to the house and not to the person,—but the list is suggestive of some personal conveniences in the way of linen, and so forth, which are desiderated both Lack of linen. in this and in most other such inventories, except in the case of towels ("manitergia") and sheets, ("linte-" amina") which we constantly find bequeathed along with other valuables by testators (see under Wills). the case, however, of one scholar Master Dreff (p. 582-4), the list of whose goods and chattels is perhaps the most complete we have, and is well worth inspection, " una camisia" occurs among other items, and again "tres camisiæ, cum quatuor braccis." The fondness Fondness for for colour so conspicuous in the dress of the period, extended itself even to the bed-cover or "helyng" (a word almost peculiar to Oxford as it would seem from the Promptuarium), an article which seems to have been frequently green (p. 583), sometimes of blue and red (p. 579), sometimes "ypowdr" or "flowryd."

Tastes of the period.

The inventories of scholars' rooms must not occupy our space any further, they will repay an examination in detail, suggesting hints as they constantly do as to the tastes and occupations as well as studies of the owners, once or twice we find a pet bird, several times a musical instrument, among books often occur "primers," and among other miscellaneous items the occurrence of rosaries, spurs, snuffers, and many other things in daily use, seems to bring us almost to a real acquaintance with the owners.

The scholar's room.

Our scholar is now, however, fairly entered of the hall, and we must next settle him in his "camera," and here a difficulty meets us which we have no direct evidence to solve; it does not appear whether the ordinary scholar had a separate set of apartments to himself; there is reason however to think that this was not a matter regulated by any invariable rule; as a general rule it may be taken for granted that he had one room only, which served for bedroom and study, so far as he required a study, for in the case only of those whom we know to have been masters, or principals of halls, do we find different statements of the contents of the "studium" and the "camera." From the frequent valuation of the contents of these rooms it may reasonably be inferred that the practice at the present day of taking the furniture of a room at a valuation from the previous tenant has descended to our times from very remote antiquity; one of the few things that have so descended; for, in spite of the general opinion to the contrary, Oxford of the present day contains both in outward appearance and in inward management scarcely anything that is old, or which while retaining an old name or an old place has not lost its original meaning or its original appearance altogether.

The details already given or referred to will enable us to Manner of life furnish our scholar's room for him; we must now give a of scholar. few minutes to the mode of passing time which would probably be the ordinary life of the student. On one important subject we are strangely enough Attendance at wholly without information of a direct kind; whether divine worship. any regular attendance at divine service was required or not from the junior members of the University. colleges, but the ordinary students must have had ample Parish churches provision for their presence in the numerous parish churches of the town (p. 89), which we know from several scattered notices were the objects of particular regard to the scholars; thus determination used to take place in them until it was forbidden (p. 245), and the scholars were in the habit of celebrating the festival days of the patron saints of their several churches, dancing disguised with masks and crowned with garlands of leaves and Various nations flowers, a practice, which, originating in the "esprit de corps" of the several nations, gave rise to frequent riots and violation of the peace, and was very early attempted to be repressed by penal statutes (p. 18). Of this division of the University into nations many notices will be found in the documents before us (pp. 20, 22, 92, 283, 305, 462), and so violent was the animosity between the Northern and Southern scholars that it was necessary that one of the proctors should always be a South and the other a North country man. It will be observed also that dissensions not less violent or frequent occurred with the Irish and Welsh scholars, and the reader will find occasional traces which lead to the conclusion that the halls were in many cases national, a presumption which will afford a clue to the violence of the quarrels which often occurred between them (p. 725, 734, 714, 590).

But we must return to the daily life of the scholar. Although no mention is made of daily devotions, the whole spirit of the University forbids us to suppose they were not compulsory, these, therefore, and breakfast over, our scholar commences the studies of the day. As we Lectures in hall have seen before, the lectures were of two kinds, some how connected, given by the principal of the hall, others by the masters of the several faculties in the several schools. It will be almost certain that the former were preparatory (p. 242), and subsidiary to the latter; perhaps, though not generally, yet sometimes a master of a school may have likewise been principal of a hall; as a rule we may conclude that his time would be too fully employed in his hall to admit of his presiding also at school. What has been said above of the grammar lessons will be equally applicable to all lectures in the halls, mutatis mutandis as to age, &c.

The lectures in the schools present several different Lectures in features, and before we describe them we must say school, a few words on the means of acquiring books available by the scholars. The stock of books possessed by Supply of the younger scholars seems to have been almost nil. case of junior The inventories of goods, which we possess, in the scholars. case of non-graduates contain hardly any books. fact is that they mostly could not afford to buy them, and, had they been able, would not have found the advantage so considerable as might be supposed, the instruction given being almost wholly oral. The chief source of supplying books was by purchase from the University sworn stationers, who had to a great extent a monopoly (p. 233), the object of which was to prevent the sale and removal from Oxford of valuable books. Of such books there were plainly very large numbers constantly changing hands; they were the pledges so continually deposited on borrowing from chests, and seem, from scattered hints, to have been a very fruitful source of litigation and dispute. But these remarks apply to the senior members of the University, the numerous Masters of Arts who were lecturing or proceeding towards superior degrees in theology, canon and civil law, and medicine, and not to the artists. Having none themselves the scholars used to carry the books of their master to the school (p. 743) a service for which they were rewarded by a grace dispensing with a portion of their studies, in fact by a holiday; from the special provision that the master might have a desk we may infer that the scholars stood round him (p. 422), for what is forbidden, as to such a privilege, in the case of a bachelor would be still less likely to be granted to a sophist. We see the class then standing round the master, who was in full academical costume; this consisted of a black cape, boots, (p. 478), hood, whether a gown was worn at lectures does not appear, but in walking in public it was necessary (p. 301) and probably therefore at lectures. lecture consists entirely of oral instruction, hence the scholar is always said "audire lectiones," "respondere " quæstioni," " auditioni textus insistere," &c. (p. 410, 242,) and after hearing long enough, along with such other practice as he could obtain, he was obliged to repeat what he had learnt (p. 243). It was required that the scholar should spend four years in the studies preliminary to the bachelor's degree (p. 410), and this period was divided into two parts, during the first portion the scholar was called "sophista generalis," and he might not present himself for "responsions" befor the expiration of one year at the least (p. 242). All the statutes preserved to us are very difficult to understand, and often contradictory to each other: among other things which it seems impossible to determine with certainty, we do not find it stated distinctly what were the subjects of examination at responsions as distinct from those at determination (p. 242-3), we know indeed that four years were necessarily to be spent in the study of logic, rhetoric, grammar and arithmetic, and perhaps music, (though it is not clear as to the latter, whether it belonged wholly to the studies after determination (i. e. the bachelor's degree) or whether a portion of the time spent in the study was taken during the four years of the sophist's training (p. 286)), but we can only form the very natural conjecture that the more elementary parts of these formed the subjects of examination at responsions. Nor again do we find any regulations as to the appointment of the masters

Responsions.

Subjects of study previous to a bachelor's degree. who officiated as examiners at responsions. To construct a theory 1 here is easier, as usual, than to put together such materials as are at hand with truth; one thing we know,—that the exercise we speak of took place in the "parvise" a name which has descended to our times, and we may be sure that the examination consisted of question and answer on the subjects above mentioned, and that the candidates for examination attended at disputations in the parvise (p. 242) continually during term by way of preparation. The oath of the sophist that he had duly fulfilled these exercises was, so far as appears, the only security for their performance, except the obvious guarantee afforded by publicity and fear of detection.

Until responsions were past the scholar was called Sophist, "sophista generalis," afterwards he acquired the name of "questionist"; and on the occasion of responding great were the festivities and consequent expenses (p. Festivals at 410), so that it was found necessary on one occasion for the chancellor to limit them to sixteen pence (p. 684).

Supposing our scholar to have attended his necessary lectures with his own principal from 9 to 10 o'clock, one in rhetoric and one in logic at the schools, we shall have brought him to the dinner hour; this over, lectures were resumed, or disputations, in later times from 1 to 3 o'clock and probably this was the case at the date of which we write. Thus we shall find that a large portion of the day is disposed of; but here we must pause awhile to mention some of the experiences of the scholar probably in his lecture hours; we pass over the calling over of Experiences the roll which would probably take place, and suppose at lecture.

but how far it can be taken as explanatory of our difficulty the reader must consider for himself.— Ed.

the master and scholars deep in the mysteries of Priscian, Donatus, or the like, almost certainly the school door will be opened and an official will present himself, perhaps this time it will be the bedel, he has come to summon a scholar before the chancellor, for last night he was discovered in the act of violently carrying off beer from a taverner (p. 506) who was bearing it to Pekwater Inn, and with several associates, was pursued and arrested, and only escaped instant imprisonment through the intervention of his protecting master (p. 17). The confusion in the school is not so great as might be anticipated, on most days a scholar is "wanted" in the school in this way, either one of them has been fighting in the street (pp. 529, 593) or he has been one of an assaulting party who attacked a rival hall (p. 725) or he has been one of a party who united to take vengeance on an obnoxious tailor (p. 634); but no one in this school answers the name or description of the scholar wanted, so the bedel goes on to another school of older scholars, for he of whom he is in search has been guilty of an enormous crime, he has frequently been fined (p. 529), to the extreme limit allowed by the statute, for wearing a dagger, more than once he has been excommunicated for violence, and now he has shot at the proctor walking the streets by night (pp. 734, 596, 13, 632). He is at length discovered in his school, having been liberated on bail the preceding evening, and now accompanies the bedel to the lodging of the chancellor's commissary, Master John Beck, rector of Lincoln College (p. 647). number of scholars accompany him, not a few seem inclined to attempt a rescue, but the idea is abandoned and only two companions enter the lodgings with him (pp. 317,457). The chancellor's commissary, and proctors are all armed, as a careful observer may see, for the hilt of a dagger is discernible at their girdles (p. 355). Our limited space forbids us to do more than just glance at these solemnities, and only some of them can be mentioned here at all. Under their proper heads in the index and table of contents other similarly interesting ceremonies will be found.

The examination at responsions having been duly passed, the scholar has now taken his first step towards graduation, and, supposing him to have responded during his second year, there will remain two full years or more, according to the time at which he entered, to be spent in the studies necessary before determination or the degree of Bachelor of Arts. The books to be used for this examination have already been specified, and, as we there stated, it is probable that grammar and arithmetic formed the chief, if not the only subjects of examination at responsions, leaving for determination the subjects of rhetoric, music, and logic; of these, logic was by far the most important (pp. 246, 446), and at times during the history of the University became so prevailing a subject of study that it almost wholly overshadowed and displaced the preliminary work of the study of grammar. It was undoubtedly from the superior importance attached to logical studies that the name "determination" took its rise, the examination for the bachelor's degree consisting mainly of questions to be determined by the candidate, and not from the circumstance that he then completed or determined his course, which was so far from being the case, that in fact he might be more properly said to commence his real Determination; studies at this time. Determination is described with more particularity than responsions, so that we shall be able to follow our scholar with more certainty through this part of his academical course. We will suppose, then, that it is Ash Wednesday of his second year after responsions (p. 244), for either on this day or some day between it and the following Tuesday, determination must commence. At 9 o'clock, the great bell of St. Mary's Church begins to sound, (p. 280) all the 32 schools in School Street are occupied by their several masters sitting in full academical dress, and with their desks before them place, and other awaiting the arrival of the scholars; for it has been relating to the ordered (p. 245) that the exercises must take place in these schools, and not either in the privacy of dwelling houses (p. 239) or in the churches. There will have been the natural difficulty in selecting the master in whose school the scholar shall make his "debut," for, although statutes were passed from time to time (p. 442) to prevent unfairness in the questions proposed and in the manner of conducting the examination (p. 246), this or that master would of course, have the reputation of being an easier examiner than another, so that the determiner would have a better opportunity of passing with credit; for the examiner was attended by others besides those concerned, and as we find it was forbidden (p. 246) to drag passers by into the schools on those occasions, it seems to be clear that, either by fair means or by foul, either by the attractions offered by display of learning and adroit argumentation, or by forcible means, those interested in the success of a particular master made every effort to procure a creditable audience, at least in respect of numbers. The scholar would also find that other and even less reputable considerations would have their effect in determining his choice of a master; for, though no fee appears to have been con-Payment of templated or recognized as the legitimate reward of the examiners. masters on these occasions, yet the perquisites they made were plainly very considerable; it is provided that no robes or other gifts (pp. 445, 454) may be given by the candidates to the masters, and again this statute was shortly afterwards repealed, so that we may conclude it was found impossible, and perhaps unadvisable also, to prevent the acceptance of such remuneration; some masters would be in the habit of accepting more valuable gifts than others; again, the companions our scholar would have in his determination, would probably form a sort of clique or club to arrange the customary festivities, by which, in spite of statutes to the contrary, and notwithstanding the unscasonablenesss of their Festivals of occurrence in Lent (p. 453), the newly admitted bachelors bachelors.

were wont to exhibit their joy. The time, the place, the amount to be spent on such occasions would all be settled long before, and no doubt the ties of relationship and nationality would not fail to exert their powerful influence in attracting scholars to join in patronizing the school of a particular master, and afterwards in celebrating together the attainment of their new honour by a festival conducted according to the customs of their country and the contents of their purse. Supposing a scholar to have arrived at the time in his academical course at which he might determine, his first step was to obtain the testimony of at least six Masters of Arts as to his fitness both in knowledge, morals, age, and even stature and personal appearance (pp. 243, 246); and these six masters had to give their testimony on oath in congregation, and were not allowed to reveal to any one the nature of the testimony given by them (p. 426); of the sufficiency of their testimony four regent Masters of Arts were chosen to decide, two north and two south country men, every year in congregation eight days before Ash Wednesday, on which day, as before stated, determination commenced: they received the testimony of the masters, who, with the scholars in whose behalf they appeared, presented themselves for that purpose before the said committee of four, either on the Sunday, Monday, or Tuesday before Ash Wednesday (p. 242); and then, if their testimony was accepted, the scholars made oath that they had completed the necessary studies and had responded in due form: if all these preliminaries were safely passed, the candidate was then said to be "admitted" to determine. It was in the danger, therefore, of not being able to provide proper testimony of this kind, or of not being able to take the necessary oath as to past studies, that the chance of failure consisted; there seems to have been nothing corresponding to our modern "plucking;" if the scholar could provide testimony to his fitness, &c., he was admitted to run the gauntlet of determining without further inquiry, and his successful or non-successful performance brought with it the consequent applause or disgrace, which seems to have been the only guarantee that he should really exert himself. Some of the provisions of the statutes on this subject are unintelligible, at least to the editor, for instance, those which provide for the Determination division of the determiners into two companies (p. 240) and again the distinction between those who determine "pro se" and "pro aliis." Can it be the case that more proficient scholars were allowed to dispute for others, and wealthier for those that were poorer? It would seem so,—at least that wealthier masters incepted for poorer is plain (p. 731). If this was the case, and practised to any extent, (and the editor believes this to have been so,) then the division of the determiners into two portions becomes less difficult to understand; for the number of actual disputants would thus not be so very numerous: and thus they might in turn go Duration of round to all the 32 schools, replying to the questions determination. proposed by each master in his turn (p. 453), and yet be able to complete the whole course within nine days; a minimum limit, which, however, might be exceeded, and doubtless often was so by the more proficient candidates, who would continue to go from school to school exhibiting their logical powers perhaps for weeks, concluding always, however, by the end of term (pp. 240, 244). Nine days of disputation, from 9 o'clock till 12 a.m., and again from 1 o'clock till 5 p.m., must have been indeed a serious test. It is almost needless, perhaps, to Nature of say that the whole process was entirely vivâ voce, examination. written examinations being apparently never even thought of, and practically next to impossible in those days, in no small degree from the paucity of materials for manuscript exercise, and the scanty accommodation in the schools. Each candidate in his turn stood up before the master, who proceeded to pose him if he could,

(p. 246), subject, however, to the interference and control of the Proctors and Chancellor (pp. 246, 422, &c.); or the candidates disputed in pairs by turns, corrected and called to order by the presiding master. Such, or nearly such, seems to have been the examination for the degree of Bachelor of Arts. After this exercise no oath appears to have been exacted, no license or degree conferred; but the bachelor, after completion of the exercises, was at liberty to proceed to the necessary studies previous to the degree of Master of Arts, of which we must now proceed to speak.

Privileges conferred by a bachelor's degree.

Determination, or, if it may be called a degree, the degree of Bachelor of Arts, conferred as an ordinary rule no privileges beyond the wearing of a hood; although, in rare instances, we find that occasionally Bachelors of Arts were allowed to lecture, and even hold the office of Principal of a Hall (p. 528). As we have already seen, a Bachelor of Arts might be of almost any age from 14 or 15 years to two or three and twenty; and in some cases of advanced years and fitness in other respects, there would be no objection to the granting of such unusual indulgences; but in the great majority of cases a bachelor continued, as his age would imply, to all intents and purposes "in statu pupillari" attending the regular lectures of his principal in hall and his masters in the schools until he had completed the course necessary for inception. This course course or studies previous continued for three full years, and the subjects of study may be seen to have been mainly geometry, astronomy, and natural, moral, and metaphysical philosophy, and especially the three last-mentioned subjects (pp. 142, 286). The text books used were Euclid, Al Hasan, Tholomeus (Almajesti), and Aristotle, through the medium of Latin translations (p. 286). In order to secure proper instruction in these various studies, as also in those for the degree of bachelor, an arrangement was made (p. 287) by which it was provided that

Duration of to inception. lectures in the several subjects should be always going Lectures in on, during full term, in the schools; the masters being the various subjects. divided into ten courses as nearly equal in number as possible, each course having to lecture on one subject, grammar, rhetoric, logic, arithmetic, music, geometry, astronomy, and the three philosophies above named. Restrictions were further laid upon the lecturers, both as Treatment of to the books they must use and the method of treatment subjects at they must pursue (p. 288): first, they might only use the text books allowed by statute; next, they must in lecturing first proceed to read the text to their scholars. then explain it with remarks upon noteworthy passages; and lastly, raise points for discussion, being careful, however, while so doing, to discuss only such questions as might naturally arise from the text, in order that no prohibited science might be incidentally taught.

It will be apparent from what has been already stated, The object that the course of education in arts was confined almost aimed at in exclusively to such studies as are adapted to the intellec-scribed, tual strengthening of the student; of literary study or the cultivation of scholarship there is positively no trace whatever; the aim proposed was so to prepare the mind as to enable the student to be better fitted for the study of the higher faculties of law, medicine, and theology; or, supposing him not to proceed beyond arts, to provide him with such an intellectual training as would fit him for ordinary life, without any attempt at the cultivation of taste. Thus the course of mental training at mediaval Oxford consisted in disputation and the display of logical acumen to an overwhelming extent, at least up to the degree of Master of Arts.

A few minutes must now however be given to a description of the process by which this degree was attained. What has been already said of the lectures of Inception, younger students will apply in the main features to those after the degree of bachelor; once more, therefore, we must suppose our scholar to have passed the necessary three years after determination in the previous preparation, and to be ready to offer himself for his inception, in other words his master's degree. The first step to be taken is to obtain a master to present the bachelor to the Chancellor and Proctors; this done, the master presenting has to make oath before them that he believes the candidate fit in morals and learning (p. 378); but this is far from being sufficient; it is further required that testimony shall be borne, by at least fourteen masters for every candidate (p. 424), nine of whom must depose that they certainly know, and five that they believe him to be fit in morals, learning, &c., and this testimony the Chancellor cannot dispense with (ibid.). This requirement being complied with, the candidate appears, presented by his master and accompanied by his testimony, before the Chancellor and Proctors in congregation, and there kneeling before him and them, and laying his hand upon the bible, makes oath that he will keep the statutes, &c., that he will actually incept within a year, that he will not spend more than a specified sum at his inception (p. 283), and that he will neither lecture himself nor hear lectures of others at Stamford, that he will use the books in the library with care (p. 375), together with other particulars, which the reader will find on reference. After having made these numerous promises, the candidate receives licence from the Chancellor in solemn form (p. 383), and with this the formal requisites for the degree of Master of Arts are complete. What was really meant by the degree of Master of Arts is not quite so clear as may be supposed; it is probably generally supposed by those who have some knowledge of the subject, that it conferred the privilege of using certain books, or rather of pursuing certain This was undoubtedly the case as to those who intended to proceed to degrees in superior faculties, but as to the great majority such a permission would merely be useless, for they roceeded to no higher degree; it is to be observed, therefore, that the degree of Master in Arts conferred also, and this was practically its chief value, the right of lecturing, and therefore of receiving money for lectures, at Oxford.

That this privilege was the main object of those who sought the degree of Master of Arts there is little doubt; they lectured for a time, not less than one complete year besides the remainder of that year in which they incepted (p. 419), and then either proceeded to higher degrees, or, in the majority of cases, continued lecturing at Oxford, or betook themselves to more active life, generally as priests, in other parts of the country. The uncertainty as to the privilege conferred by the degree of Master of Arts arises from the ambiguity of the word "legere," "admitto te ad legen-"dum," &c., of which it may suffice to observe that, throughout the documents here printed, the word "legere" is almost, if not quite, always used in the sense of giving lectures; for studying the usual term is "audire," "auditioni textus insistere," &c. With respect to the expenses attending the taking of a Master's degree, it should be here mentioned that the regular fee paid by the candidate on receiving license from the Chancellor was, as it is expressed, "integra communa," Fees payable and in the case of a bachelor on his admission "dimi-on inception. "dia communa;" that is to say, in more modern parlance, a whole and a half "commons." We have, however, no certain statement of the amount of this sum, but its probable value will appear from the following remarks. The word "communa" originally meant the common purse of the society living together: members of the same hall are called "communarii;" a certain official of the chapter of Wells Cathedral is called "communarius" (p. 650), apparently a sort of bursar, or perhaps steward; and in the early statutes for W. of Durham's scholars the allowance for each scholar or fellow is not to exceed twelve pence a week, that is for expenses of food, &c., for he had a separate allowance for room-rent, and servants. In determining therefore the amount of the fees paid by bachelors and masters on taking their degree, the only difficulty is to decide whether the "communa" paid by them was the sum equivalent to the expenses of one week, or of one term, or of a year; it may be safely assumed, however, that it was the value of one week's expenses, i.e., in the case of a bachelor sixpence, in that of a master one shilling (p. 469). This, however, was but a very small part of the expense attending inception, a ceremony of which a more particular account must not longer be delayed. On receiving license from the Chancellor as above described, inception followed usually almost immediately, and could not be deferred longer than a year without incurring the necessity of a fresh license, with all its concomitant difficulties. It is not a little remarkable that, while we find that a special season of the year was appointed for determination, a comparatively insignificant event, inception seems to have taken place at any time: perhaps the great excitement attending even the inception of a single inceptor may have been a sufficient reason for not desiring the concurrence of many such events on the same day or at the same season. His inception was then the culminating point of the scholar's life, the day on which, probably more than on any other day in his life, he started on the road to success and renown, or sunk into the ordinary rank and file of his class. Other expenses first object was to have provided himself with a school in which to make his appearance before his audience (p. 415); this, of course, will have been an object of his solicitude for a long time; probably for months, not improbably for years, he may have secured beforehand some favourite room is School-street, and with the hiring of such accommodation the heavy expenses of his degree commence. In the next place he must have purchased, unless he has been so fortunate as to have them bequeathed to him (p. 651), the necessary articles of academcial costume, without which he could not present himself in his school; the dress in which he appeared (p. 434) was that of ordinary masters lecturing, and the prices of the several articles may be seen enu- Clothes, robes. merated on reference (p. 382), with the exception of the &c., and their "Pynsons," a sort of boot or shoe, the price of which we do not find (p. 450). These necessaries being duly provided, his next duty is to go round to the school of every master (p. 433), and humbly request him to honour him by his presence on the occasion. But the most serious expense was the providing of a decent suit, of what nature exactly we are not informed, for all those invited to attend: this was no doubt an intolerable burden (p. 435), and statutes were passed limiting the recipients of such favours to the relations or near kindred, or members of the same hall; and it was, in all probability, the desire to avoid this and other expenses, to be presently mentioned, which led to the practice of incepting "for others": a system which could not but have had ill consequences, since a wealthy clerk would by these means obtain an opportunity of distinguishing himself; while others less wealthy, but perhaps more learned, would, from lack of means to defray the necessary charges, pass with the mere dumb show of personal attendance. In addition to the ex-Gratuities to penses already mentioned, every inceptor was obliged the bedels. to present the bedels with a gratuity of twenty shillings and a pair of buckskin gloves; and if he possessed an income of forty pounds a year he was also required to give a feast to all the Regent Masters, or in default forfeit a sum of twenty marks to the University (p. 354). upon them (pp. 220, 355), and to refer the reader to the index of this work for further particulars. inceptor then, having duly performed the above necessary duties, appeared in his school, a youth surrounded by his seniors, all arranged in special order regulated by statute for the seemly conduct of the solemnity (pp. 405, 477), and commenced a series of lectures, readings, or disputations, selecting, as it would seem, his own subjects, within the limits of the books prescribed, which he was obliged to continue for that year and another whole year (p. 419), forty days of which were to be occupied by disputations (p. 430). Of course it is to be presumed that the audience would fall away or increase according to circumstances, and would depend on the attractions offered by the inceptor. Whether the course of lectures by inceptors in this their first year could be attended by ordinary scholars and count " pro forma" we are not informed. Of the festivals, with which this ceremony of inception was ushered in, and the scenes of riot and disorder inseparable from them, frequent notices occur; it would appear that they were held either in the hall to which the inceptor belonged, or sometimes in tents (p. 308), and the several guests had their seats assigned them by no less a person than the Chancellor himself, according to their rank in the University. It was considered necessary moreover to provide by statute that free ingress and egress should be allowed during the feast to those entitled to be present, and that none should assail them while engaged in their festival by throwing stones at the roof, or battering the doors, or other similar violent attentions.

Festivals at inception;

regulations for conducting them.

It will be proper here, in connection with the subject of lectures of inceptors, to inquire into the meaning of the terms Regent and Non-Regent Masters. At the present time Regency is almost a nominal distinction, and what the true difference was seems very difficult to ascertain. The expression "regere " scholas Oxonia," of frequent occurrence, leads to the opinion that a Regent Master was one who actually held a school in grammar or any other faculty either at Oxford or at any other "studium generale"; and a non-Regent, one who had passed through that necessary probation. If this was the meaning of the term, then it would seem probable that the exercises of the inceptor, which lasted as we have seen for nearly two years, were in fact the lectures which constituted him a Regent Master, and that during the time in which he was obliged to complete them he was called by that name, and not afterwards, even though he might continue to lecture for his own purposes at his discretion for as long as he pleased. We know that non-Regents were obliged to attend congregation at the summons of the bedel to make a "quorum" if needed, and this seems to make the above explanation probable, for, not being engaged in the work of lecturing, they might fairly be presumed at leisure to attend the business of the University.

We have now conducted the scholar through his academical course to his degree of Master of Arts, and here we must take leave of the studies of the University with a few additional observations on the other faculties. And first it should be noticed that the ceremony of incep- Superior tion was not confined to the faculty of Arts; we read faculties: continually of inceptors in grammar (pp. 440, 443). This faculty was inferior to all the others, and those who incepted in it were allowed to do so without many of the formalities required of other inceptors, and, it would seem, need not have passed through the previous academical training at all, but before license had to undergo an examination as to their fitness for the office of instructor in their intended department (pp. 87, 436, 440). The faculty of Arts was the mainstay, and its supremacy of members composed the bulk of the members of the the faculty of Arts.

Correspondence of the forms in the superior faculties with those previous to inception in Arts.

University, the majority proceeding, as has before been observed, to no superior degree. But supposing a Master of Arts to be desirous of devoting himself to the pursuit of the higher branches of learning, he found himself with the option before him of graduating in Civil or Canon Law, Medicine, or lastly and chiefly Theology, or, as it was afterwards called, Divinity. each of these faculties, which were built, so to speak, on the solid foundation of graduation in Arts, he would find a course of studies before him prescribed by statute, with accompanying exercises to be performed previous to the attainment of each degree, corresponding exactly to the several studies and exercises required previous to graduation in Arts. Thus, he would have to respond, dispute, and determine either in Law, Medicine, or Theology, whichever he might select, before receiving license in any of those faculties; and finally he would incept, each of which, in the steps leading to the last degree, was an exact resemblance of the several steps in the faculty of Arts. The final degree in each was that of Master; thus, one who had graduated first in Arts, and afterwards proceeded to the same degree in Theology, was called Master of Theology, or sometimes Doctor, a distinction without a difference, Master indicating the highest degree in that particular faculty to which the person in question belonged. It has been said that the faculty of Arts was the large majority of the University; it was also supreme, and this supremacy was most carefully guarded: the right of deliberating on every subject before it was brought before Congregation was secured to them, and jealously maintained (pp. 117, 187, 331, 491), and without their consent no act of the University was held to be valid (p. 429); nor was it of any avail that a majority of faculties voted for any measure, unless a numerical majority of all Masters collectively were found to support it (p. 323).

A few observations have been promised on the Expenses of an expenses of an University course at the time we University course in the speak of; we will now glance, somewhat hastily of fifteenth necessity, at this subject. In the first place we may century. affirm without hesitation that no fee whatever was required to be paid on entrance or matriculation; so far as hindrance from this cause is concerned the scholar was unfettered; he came to Oxford and entered any hall he had reason to prefer. In the halls the expenses would doubtless vary according to the style of the members; but to take an average case, and such, we may suppose, are the cases which we shall appeal to for our facts, the expenses of an ordinary scholar may be thus reckoned in the fifteenth century. First, his "commons" or "batels" would seem to have Batels. cost him from eightpence to one shilling a week, seldom more (p. 469). Next, for the rent of his "camera" or room-rent, room, supposing him to have a separate apartment, it appears that he would pay to the Principal of his hall about two shillings and sixpence a term; this sum, at any rate, was the actual charge in the case of "Athelstane Hall," in the year 1446 (p. 555), and we may infer that it was about the usual amount, for in another instance we find a clerk (in this case a priest, and therefore of mature age and probably decently lodged) paying four shillings for room and lectures (p. 664), and we are further confirmed in our estimate by finding (p. 655) that Master Richard Browne, Archdeacon of Rochester, a considerable pluralist, and, as appears from his will, a wealthy man, paid, for his room in Lincoln College, thirteen shillings and fourpence for a year's rent; a sum, which, allowing for the presumably superior accommodation he would require, will correspond fairly with the previously named charges. For lectures the necessary outlay is not quite so cer-fees for lectures tainly ascertainable, but we can form a tolerably just estimate from the following data. Every Master was,

we know, obliged by statute to enforce the payment of his salary from his scholars (p. 427); this payment took place at the end of term, and was called "collection" (pp. 129, 236), a name which, now applied in a wholly different sense, has often puzzled the curious as to its original meaning. This "collection," then, levied by each master lecturing, varied according to the subject taught; for lectures in grammar the statutable payment was eightpence for each term, for logic threepence, for natural philosophy fourpence (p. 427); reckoning four terms (which was the usual mode) to the year. are the only subjects for lectures in which we find regular payments specified in the documents before us; with regard to the higher faculties, we find from one instance, canon law (p. 401), the payment for lectures in them was at a very much higher ratio, but, in accordance with our plan, the detailed inquiry into these must be omitted. As to the other subjects, in which the ordinary student in Arts would require lectures, i. e. arithmetic, rhetoric, geometry, astronomy, &c., we have no statement as to the fees to be demanded, but in all subjects during the same term no one could require assistance; we may reasonably estimate the expenses therefore of the student for lectures at about two shillings the term, taking one year with another, and supposing lectures in the last-named subjects to be charged for at the same price as those in natural philosophy. There remain several other items to be reckoned; the payment of the bedels, for whom the University was careful to provide (p. 256), and the payment of the servants of the halls: the amount due to these was regulated by the expenses of the scholar and servants in himself; each had to pay two servants, a superior and an inferior (a curious instance, again, of the vitality of insignificant customs and names, which exist while the greater yield place to new; for one can hardly resist under scout, to be found, it is believed, in almost every college at the present day), to whom the scholar of the poorest degree had to pay, every term, threepence and one penny respectively (p. 469): the passage referred to is very interesting, showing as it does the various rates of living usually found at the period. other remaining expenses incident to the student's life at Oxford, the amount absolutely necessary to be expended cannot be determined; these are the usual Expenses of festivities at responsions, determination, and inception festivals after examinations. which have been already treated of: as to the first, however, we find that the questionist was limited to the expenditure of sixteen pence (p. 684); as to the other two occasions we may safely conclude that they were usually far more expensive, and the more so because there was no possible limit to the giving of suits of robes or clothes which was customary on these occasions, especially at inception. In the case of the poorer students, of course these expenses must have been to a very great extent avoided, and yet they could not have been so altogether, so that no doubt then, as now, it was not the necessary expenses of the academical course which would burden the scholar, but the far heavier Conventional and more vexatious exactions of the custom of the expenses. place, and the conventional rules of the society in which he lived, which could not be altogether disregarded without such a loss of caste as would amount in fact to absolute exclusion from all social advantages. may be assumed that the expenses attending determination and inception in an ordinary case could not have amounted to less than ten marks, for we find (p. 353) that every mendicant friar at inception was either to feast the Regent Masters or forfeit ten marks. We have reason to know that the payments demanded from religious generally by the University were rather in excess of those required of seculars, and rightly so, for they were certainly, as a rule, more able to bear them: thus the allowance for the monks of Durham College (founded 1380) was much more liberal than that made by any of the founders of colleges before that time. Supposing, then, that we take ten marks, the equivalent for a feast to the Masters by a regular graduate, on inception, to be equal to the expenditure of an ordinary secular both at determination and at inception, we shall probably not have made an unfair estimate. There remain to be accounted for the necessary clothes and journeys: as to the former some account of the various prices paid at Oxford for academical dresses will be found in the following pages (pp. 382, 519); and of journeys and the attendant expenses enough has already been said. As to books, it is really impossible to make any guess even at the probable expense. We have stated that probably the junior students possessed seldom any books, or but very few; and as to the books used by the more advanced students, or clerks, it will be seen on referring to lists of scholars' goods on reference to the index (under inventory, wills, &c.), that these varied so very much in value, from two

To this must be added, as we have seen, certainly as much as seven pounds for various necessary, or practically necessary, payments for feasts, perquisites of bedels, and fees on graduation and the like; for books and clothes we may allow him ten shillings a year more. This will bring his whole expenses from the age Total amount. of eleven to twenty years to the sum of 34l. 9s. It will be seen that no reckoning has been made for journeys, nor for expenses during vacation, for reasons to be given presently; we will meanwhile pause to observe that in comparing the above expenses with those of more modern times, we are met by the serious question of the relative value of money at different periods in our history: there is no space here for a disquisition on this subject, but one or two observations may assist us in The allowances for the scholars, or our comparison. fellows, of University and Merton Halls was about fifty shillings a year, besides an addition for rooms and servants of about half as much more every year. Studies in vacations.

Means of subsistence for poor scholars. various articles mentioned in the documents here printed which will occur to the reader. Thus we should find that, in money of the present day, a youth's whole education could be paid for from the age of eleven to twenty years,-after which time, having incepted, it is to be presumed he could support himself either by lectures at Oxford or otherwise elsewhere in life,—for the sum of 639l. As to journeys and vacation expenses, the two being closely connected, we should observe that no scholars left Oxford at all, or in rare cases, between October 9th and July 7th at the least; a very large number did not leave the University at all even during the long vacation, as is evident from several allusions in this volume, and especially from one case, already cited, that, namely, of the schoolmaster John Martyn and his scholars (p. 601). Those who did leave probably often walked home, and even begged their way about the country, being, as we find from other sources, quite a nuisance sometimes to the farmers and others at whose doors they sought alms. As would be expected, however, there are scarcely any hints even as to the manner in which the vacations were spent away from Oxford in these documents. Now and then we find studies during the vacation recognized, but these apparently were pursued at Oxford (p. 88): once indeed we find (p. 684) two poor scholars receive authority from the University to beg alms; but beyond what has already been mentioned little else will be found to account for the occupation of scholars during the vacation. In all probability, however, those who left the University during that time certainly did not increase their expenses, and many would add to their resources: there are, however, other works in which more will be found than can be given here on this subject. Before dismissing this subject it should be stated that the foregoing calculation of a scholar's expenses is supposed to represent the outlay of one in fairly comfortable circumstances at the period we speak of:

there would be a very large number, probably the majority, not nearly so well provided for, eking out their precarious allowances by begging, by working as servants, by learning handicrafts, &c., and many supported by bequests and exhibitions (pp. 516, 656, 661, 700, 707), and picking up the various doles at funerals and commemoration masses, where such needy miserables were always to be found (pp. 558, 593, 648).

One very important feature in Oxford life at this Legal maperiod has been only cursorily mentioned hitherto, the chinery of the University. legal machinery of the University, and to it we must now give a few minutes' attention. It has been observed above that the frequency of litigation, and the very large provision for its conduct, is one of the most surprising parts of the working of the University; and indeed one can hardly imagine how employment could have been found for so large a staff of officials. It is well known, and therefore hardly needs remark, that no member of the privilege could be sued in the first instance in any other than an University court (pp. 303, 510, 719), and scholars might not even enter a lay court (p. 17). It only remains then that we ascertain as far as possible what was the constitution of the Chancellor's court. To enumerate, or even give The Chanreferences to, the various powers of the Chancellor, cellor's court.

His jurisdiction would merely be to repeat here a portion of the index and authority. and table of contents; it may suffice to observe that he was ex officio a justice of the peace (p. 535), that he had almost supreme power (except of course of life and death) over all members of the privilege, that this power consisted of imprisonment, banishment, fines (p. 305), and excommunication, all of which are of continual occurrence; over the townsmen he only exercised a joint jurisdiction with the mayor and civic authorities (p. 164), between whom and the Chancellor there existed a sort of right of extradition. The Chancellor's court was held, it ap-Place where pears, either at his own lodgings, which was the more court was held.

usual practice, or, occasionally, at St. Mary's church; the Proctors were assessors, and the three seem to have constituted the court. When a culprit was brought before them it was usual for him to have an advocate, but who these advocates were, or how qualified, we are not told; that they were very numerous (p. 77), and contrived for their own ends to protract causes indefinitely, to the great injury of the University, there are constant complaints (p. 260). So far then the officers of the court and its practice may be easily understood, and there would be nothing surprising if occupation were continually Deputy judges. found for such a court; but we read of deputy judges being appointed to sit in various parts of the town, having, it is presumed, a subordinate and delegated authority (pp. 69, 70, et sqq.); it is provided that they must be bachelors of civil law at least, chosen every term by the professors (i.e. Doctors or Masters) of canon and civil law, and were called "Hebdomadarii." would take this opportunity of correcting an error of no slight importance made by him in reference to this subject; it will be found that (on the margin of pp. 70, 72) the word "judices" has been wrongly interpreted "jury;" the reason of which is simply that this portion of the work was prepared at a time when his knowledge of the subject was not sufficiently matured; after observation showed him, what at first seemed difficult to understand, that there was a large number of judges holding courts at once in Oxford. In more than one instance the names of these deputy judges for the several parishes are preserved to us (pp. 189, 749). The mode of conducting causes before them does not appear to have differed from the process in the Chancellor's court; Advocates and in both cases the scholar appeared with his advocate, if he required one, and his own master (p. 72), but in the case of the deputy judges the accused had the right of objecting to his judge (p. 72), and no assessors are mentioned in these inferior courts. The consequence of this multiplication of courts was incessant appeals to higher tribunals, which became so serious a hindrance to the business of the University that statutes are constantly occurring framed for the purpose of regulating or preventing this practice (pp. 74, 230, 260). Of the order of these Order of appeals it was ordered that no spiritual cause terminable appeals within the University could be carried out of it; in the first instance an appeal lay from the Chancellor to con- to congregagregation of regents, and from them to congregation of tion, regents and non-regents, and from them at once to the pope (p. 461), and not to any other authority within the to the Pope, realm: where cases of appeal to the archbishop of Canter- to the archbury or other bishops occur, it seems to have been done by bishop of Canterbury, &c., a special agreement to decide by their arbitration (p. 145). There is no mention of the exercise of any jurisdiction in spiritual causes exercised by the above-mentioned deputy judges, but in temporal causes an appeal lay from them first to the Chancellor, and then, as above stated, to the superior courts (p. 232); and in all temporal causes the ultimate appeal was to the king (ibid.), to the king. To him also was addressed the letter of the Chancellor called "significavit" (pp. 225, 795), which was an appeal from the Chancellor to the king requesting him to try the efficacy of the secular arm in cases where the authority of the church, as represented at Oxford, had failed in the case of some refractory delinquent. In addition to these provisions for legal processes, there will be found to have existed a recognized system of settling some causes without recourse to regular courts of law. This process, sufficiently well Compurgation. First, compurgation. known to require no detailed account here, consisted in appearance of the accused, sometimes with more, sometimes with fewer, always with some friends, before the Chancellor, and making of oath before him by all of them conjointly that the charge was unfounded; of this numerous instances will be found, some of them very curious, particularly as to defamation of character (pp.

Evils of the process.

The evil results of this practice are 509, 626, 750). largely insisted on by Dr. Gascoigne, who enters his protest in the Chancellor's court book (p. 536) against the indiscriminate admission of accused parties to this method of clearing themselves. He complains that he has known of cases where parties have not only perjured themselves, but not hesitated also to admit privately that they had done so; and farther that no good end can be answered by it, for no one dare object to another being admitted to compurgation, knowing that such an objection would render him liable to violence and maining at the least, if not murder: and he follows up his remarks by advice to succeeding Chancellors to be cautious how they admit accused persons to this privilege, and not to divulge the name of the accuser to the person accused (p. 537). The other is arbitration; of this we shall find several instances, interesting in many ways, and especially as giving on several occasions a very near view of the details of life of the period (pp. 550, 552, 720, &c.; see Arbitration). manner of and The plan was for the parties to agree in nominating some one or sometimes two arbitrators, and bind themselves under a heavy penalty to abide by their decision, and if they could come to no decision within a certain time, then by the decision of some other specified arbitrator. awards in these cases are sometimes exceedingly curious; for instance, the parties are required to shake hands, to go on their knees to each other, to give each other "the "kiss of peace," and generally to make up the whole quarrel by a feast, the dishes at which are sometimes also judicially determined (ibid.).

Arbitration,

details relating to.

> To the foregoing notices the editor had intended to add others; and, especially, of the officers of the University, but the space allotted to this introduction is already well nigh filled, and he must now conclude this too brief and imperfect sketch, of which he can only say that it pretends to be no more than a sketch, and may at least, he would venture to hope, be sufficient to induce the reader to search in the documents themselves for further information. There will be found, scattered here and there throughout the work, many interesting facts relating rather to mediæval life generally than to Oxford in particular; these, however, have not been noticed in this introduction, both because it has been the editor's aim strictly to confine himself to the subject undertaken, viz., Academical life and studies at Oxford, and also because most if not all of them have been already touched very ably in a previous work in this series (Liber Albus, &c.). There are also very many things which are naturally a part of his subject which the editor has not been able to find space for in the introduction; on looking over what he has written, he is however rather inclined to regret that he has attempted so many things, than that he has omitted some; the number of subjects claiming attention is so great, and the space of time covered by the work so very large, and that of necessity, that it has been no easy task both to select what should be mentioned and to handle them when selected.

Nor can the editor allow the work to be launched without a word of apology for the long delay that has occurred in its production. The simple truth is that it was first designed and begun at a season of comparative leisure some years ago, and, in the ordinary course, would have found its completion in a year or two; but residence at Oxford brought with it a very laborious life, and the necessary work of the place forced literary pursuits aside; so that not only was the time which could be given to the work small, but, what was a far more serious hindrance, it had to be always put aside at the commencement of every term, and was soon well nigh forgotten; to resume a work, so different from the routine of life at Oxford, as soon as each vacation commenced, required of itself no little effort, and to take up the thread afresh, and re-adapt himself to the fresh subject required even more. To these difficulties must be added the loss of the whole leisure of one year (or nearly) from severe illness, and lastly the removal to the charge of an onerous and laborious parish at a distance from all books of reference during the past year; which last circumstance will, it is hoped, be accepted as an excuse for some slight errors which may appear to the In two particulars the stereotyped custom will be found to have not been followed; first as to "errata" or "corrigenda." One of these has already been apologized for, and there are two others which the editor would correct here; one is that, by inadvertence, Thursday is put instead of Friday, on margin of p. 86; the other is that "hats," on the margin of p. 3, should be "caps." In the second place no vocabulary has been given; and for this reason: whatever words occur in this work which the editor did not himself understand while preparing the work, he was able to find either by having recourse to Du Cange or to other well known glossaries, and very often those of Liber Albus, Custumarum, &c.; and those sources of knowledge are, it is presumed, equally accessible to others; some few words, however, he regrets to say, are to be found in this volume which he could not find anywhere, nor meet with any explanation of them; it seemed not very useful therefore to arrange them, to the amount of half-a-dozen, on a sheet by themselves.

Lastly, there remain the "gratiarum actiones." First, the acknowledgments of the editor are due, where they cannot be received. If the present work supplies any gap, the idea of first undertaking it was suggested by the late Canon Shirley, and so far the credit is due to him; at least he first suggested to the editor the idea that there were documents worth publishing in the Archives at Oxford; whether he was right or no the reader must form his own opinion: for the work itself the editor is alone responsible; but he cannot but acknowledge with affectionate remembrance the assistance so often rendered by Dr. Shirley during the course of a friendship of many years; to him it is certainly due that there are not many more blunders in this work than there are. In the next place, valuable help was at one time afforded, in procuring permission to inspect and transcribe the records of the University, by the present Bishop of Peterborough and the Dean of Westminster, to both of whom the editor desires here to render his acknowledgment; and also not less perhaps, though for a wholly different sort of aid, he would here tender his thanks to all the librarians of the Bodleian library, and to the authorities of more than one college, and especially to the master of University College, to whose courtesy and liberality he has been indebted for more than one document, for their uniform kindness and attention; and lastly to numerous other friends, who from time to time have offered a suggestion, and whose assistance is not forgotten by the editor, though their names are not written here.

The commemorations which remain not fixed by the ordinances, are (1) that of John and Thomas Kempe and Richard Lichfield, which must, however, be held between the festivals of S. Luke and All Saints; (2) that of Henry Chichele; (3) the election of the Chancellor, which must be on the last day of term before Whitsunday; (4) the election of the Proctors, which must be on the first "Congregation" after Easter; (5) the commemoration of Gilbert Routhbury, which is to be "quarta feria post S. Tri-"nitatis festum."

For commencement and end of terms, see Pt. I., p. 447.

The date of this and the following bulls is uncertain; the bull may be of Innocent III., in which case the date will be A.D. 1210. If we assign it to Innocent IV., it must have been just at the expiration of his reign; and that this is the true date may be safely assumed, for in the Bullarium no bulls are to be found issued by Innocent III. from Anagnia in the same year and month with these; and, which is perhaps more conclusive, we find the usual expression "non obstante," by which Innocent IV. is so well known.

&quot;regentium" occur, the contraction used is not that which might stand for "regratorum," but for "regens," or some inflexion of it. Anthony Wood, however, gives his opinion in favour of "regratorum." I have not felt justified in inserting " regratorum " into the text, when there is so great a preponderance in favour of "regentium" in the MSS. The matter is not wholly without interest, because upon the word to be adopted here depends the question apparently of the origin of the " Masters of the streets," or police of the University.

A. 9. CERTAIN ARTICLES CONDEMNED AT OXFORD.

A.D. 1314.
The Doctors of divinity at Oxford pronounce certain articles to be heretical.

Isti articuli subscripti fuerunt reprobati tanquam erronei a Magistris theologiæ Universitatis Oxoniæ, anno Domini millesimo trecentesimo quarto-decimo, mense Februarii:—

- (1.) Quod Deus Pater potuit produxisse creaturam ante Verbum origine, natura vel tempore.
- (2.) Quod Pater potuit producere omnem creaturam sine Filio producente, de potentia absoluta etsi non de potentia ordinata.
- (3.) Quod etsi Filius nullam creaturam produceret, vel produxisset, vel producere potuisset, cum Pater omnem creaturam creabilem in priori originis, Verbo non producto, produceret, Filius nihil minus esset omnipotens, quia haberet eandem vim et eandem potentiam cum Patre, sicut Spiritus Sanctus est omnipotens, quamvis non possit producere Filium sicut Pater potest, quia, non obstante, hic tamen haberet eandem vim et eandem potentiam cum Patre.
- (4.) Quod si creatura produceretur ante Verbum, debet intelligi produci a prima persona in divinis, non a Patre.
- (5.) Quod opera Trinitatis, respectu creaturarum, sunt indistincta de facto, non tamen necessario, quia alio modo posset fieri de potentia Dei absoluta, sicut redemptio generis humani posset fieri, vel potuisset fieri, sine Christi morte et incarnatione.
- (6.) Quod si Pater potest producere Verbum, quod majus est quam creatura, sine socio, eadem ratione, vel majori, Pater potest producere creaturam, quæ minor est, sine socio, id est, sine Filio producente.

- (7.) Quod ex quo philosophi, qui tam clare et limpide intellexerunt, non posuerunt productionem Verbi in divinis, et tamen posuerunt cunctas res emanare ab uno supposito, quod est perfectum et sufficiens, nec viderunt in hoc formalem contradictionem; ita et ego possem ponere, quod Deus Pater potuit producere creaturas ante Verbum, sine formali contradictione.
- (8.) Quod si potuit creatura produci ante Verbum, non propter hoc sequitur formalis repugnantia terminorum, nec ex parte Patris producentis, nec ex parte creature productæ.

CISTÆ ROUBURI.3

A.D. circ. 1320.

Aspecturis et audituris præsentes literas Christi fidelibus universis, Johannes Luterel, Cancellarius, cœtusque Magistrorum Universitatis Oxoniæ unanimis, salutem in omnium Salvatore.

Gilbert de Routhebury, of his charity, has bequeathed to the University the sum of two hundred and fifty marks, to establish two funds; the one, of two hundred marks, to be lent to the Masters and Scholars solely; the other, of fifty marks, also for the use of the Masters and Scholars, may on occasion be lent to the University to defray legal expenses;

Cum inter cætera pietatis opera Scholarium indigentiis subvenire pium existat, qui, ut in agro Domini scientiæ margaritam acquirant, laboribus, discriminibus et ærumnis variis se exponunt, hac igitur consideratione dominus Gilbertus de Routheburi, benevolentiam specialem affectionem ad Magistros et Scholares Universitatis antedictie concipiens, nobis ducentas et quinquaginta marcas sterlingorum donavit et tradidit, quas ab eodem recognoscimus nos habuisse et recepisse, in duabus cistis conservandas, una videlicet ducentarum marcarum, alia quinquaginta marcarum; quarum una, que crit ducentarum marcarum, in utilitatem Magistrorum et Scholarium Universitatis prædictæ convertetur sub forma inferius annotata, alia sub eadem forma; hoc adjecto, quod si contingat Universitatem, vel propter litem, vel alias causas, pecunia indigere, præstita cautione sufficienti, possit totam illam summam quinquaginta marcarum, vel partem ejusdem, mutuari: ita [quod] cum denunciatum fuerit custodibus cistæ illius per Cancellarium et Procuratores de Universitatis indigentia instante, vel quæ futura verisimiliter timeatur, ex tunc non liceat custodibus dictæ cistæ quidquam Magistris aut Scholaribus mutuare, quousque per Cancellarium et Procuratores fuerint præmuniti.

<sup>3</sup> No date is given; but it may be gathered that it was about the year 1320, from the following circumstances: that this ordinance was issued in the chancellorship of John Luterel. Now, from a French and Roman Roll, 11 Edw. II., m. 13, i.e. in the year 1318, we find that the king requests the pope to listen to the business of J. Luterel, Chancellor of the University of Oxford. Again, in a Close Roll, 16 Edw. II., p. 2, m. 12, i.e. in the year 1323, the king commands John Luterel to appear before him at York, to answer to certain accusations arising out of his chancellorship, during his tenure of that office. Thus this statute must fall between the years 1318 and 1323.

<sup>4</sup> This short paragraph is of a different and rather later hand than the preceding or succeeding, and does not properly belong to the ordinance for the Routhebury or Gildford chests.

&#x27;No ordinance exists relating to this chest; but we find, from Patent Roll, 33 Edw. I., p. 1, m. 19, i.c. in the year 1305, that the executors of William Burnell, late Provost of Wells, have licence to give nine shops and a messuage in Oxford to the Master and Scholars of Balliol College. Probably this is the founder of the Burnell chest.

As far as the MSS. are concerned, there is nothing to give more than a very vague clue to the date of this statute. In C. it occurs next after one of the year 1252; in

I), also there is nothing to mark the date with certainty, though the other statutes in that MS, which are in juxtaposition with this, are of about the date given here. I have not, however, hesitated to assign the date given by Antony-a-Wood, on the ground that the circumstances of the period point it out as most probably correct. Ed.

SEQUENS STATUTUM LEGATUR RELIGIOSIS DUNTAXAT.1

A.D. 1358.
No monk, not having been a Regent in Arts, of whatever order he may be, shall be allowed to read "the Senteness," until after a year-of opponency duly performed.

Item, statutum est, quod nullus qui prius in artibus non rexerit, cujuscunque ordinis fuerit, de cætero lecturam libri sententiarum aggredi præsumat, quousque per annum integrum opposuerit, rite et publice in disputationibus ordinariis Magistrorum, nullo alio ejusdem ordinis interim opponente, ut sibi cedat pro forma, consuetudini autem approbatæ, quoad religiosos possessionatos, super <sup>2</sup> concursu opponendi et legendi cum seipsis aut aliis quibuscunque, nec super tempore, præsenti statuto nullatenus intendimus derogare.<sup>3</sup>

DE LITERIS ACQUISITIS PRO GRATIIS.4

A.D. 1357-8?
If any person shall obtain letters [from influential people] for the purpose of extorting graces or dispensations of any sort from the University, he shall be held incapable of taking any degree.

Item, statutum est, quod quilibet, qui prius in Universitate non rexerit in aliqua facultate, literas qualescunque et quovismodo pro gratia aliqua ab Universitate Regentium seu Regentium et Non-regentium habenda, quin potius extorquenda, pro aliquo gradu scholastico obtinendo in eadem, aut super dispensatione formæ, vel pro actu aliquo pertinente ad gradum talem, contra statuta et consuetudines Universitatis hactenus usitatas, de caetero impetravit, et eis visus fuerit quovismodo, eo ipso sit inhabilis ad omnem gradum habitum et habendum in Universitate, cum quo sic inhabilitato non liceat ullo tempore dispensare.

Title rot in C. or D. This statute would appear, from its position in D., to be of the year 1357; but a note on the margin, of the same age as the MS., observes: "Istud statutum fuit declaratum tem-porc Toulworth et Derby, prout continetur in ista clausula 'Consuctudini,' &c.;" i.e. 1358.

These two statutes occur in D. immediately after the preceding; and they occur there only; Masters Toulworth and Derby were Proctors in the year 1358; so that the true date is probably given in the margin.

CALENDARS OF STATE PAPERS, &c.

[IMPERIAL 8vo., cloth. Price 15s. each Volume or Part.]

As far back as the year 1800, a Committee of the House of Commons recommended that Indexes and Calendars should be made to the Public Records, and thirty-six years afterwards another Committee of the House of Commons reiterated that recommendation in more forcible words; but it was not until the incorporation of the State Paper Office with the Public Record Office that the present Master of the Rolls found himself in a position to take the necessary steps for carrying out the wishes of the House of Commons.

On 7 December 1855, he stated to the Lords of the Treasury that although "the Records, State Papers, and Documents in his charge constitute the most "complete and perfect series of their kind in the civilized world," and although "they are of the greatest value in a historical and constitutional "point of view, yet they are comparatively useless to the public, from the "want of proper Calendars and Indexes."

Acting upon the recommendation contained in the Reports of the House of Commons above referred to, he suggested to the Lords of the Treasury that to effect the object he had in view it would be necessary for him to employ a few persons fully qualified to perform the work which he contemplated.

Their Lordships assented to the necessity of having Calendars prepared and printed, and they further empowered the Master of the Rolls to take such steps as might be necessary for this purpose.

The following Works have been already published under the direction of the Master of the Rolls:—

CALENDARIUM GENEALOGICUM; for the Reigns of Henry III. and Edward I. Edited by CHARLES ROBERTS, Esq., Secretary of the Public Record Office. 2 Vols. 1865.

This is a work of great value for elucidating the early history of our nobility and landed gentry.

Vol. III.—1619-1623.

Vol. II.—1611-1618.

Vol. IV.—1623-1625, with Addenda.

Mrs. Everett Green has completed a Calendar of the Domestic State Papers of the reign of James I. in four volumes. The mass of historical matter thus rendered accessible to investigation is large and important. It throws new light on the Gunpowder-plot; the rise and fall of Somerset; the particulars connected with the Overbury murder; the disgrace of Sir Edward Coke; and other matters connected with the reign.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, DOMESTIC SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF CHARLES I., preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by John Bruce, Esq., F.S.A. 1858-1867.

Vol. IX.—1635–1636.

Vol. V.—1631-1633.

Vol. X.—1636–1637.

This Calendar is in continuation of that of the Domestic State Papers of the reign of James I., and comprises the first thirteen years of the reign of Charles I., but is in active progress towards completion, and will extend to the Restoration of Charles II. It presents notices of a large number of original documents of great value to all inquirers into the history of the period to which it relates. Many of these documents have been hitherto unknown to men of letters.

Seven volumes, embracing the period between 1660 and 1667, have been published.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS relating to Scotland, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by MARKHAM JOHN THORPE, Esq., of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford. 1858.

Vol. I., the Scottish Series, of the Reigns of Henry VIII. Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth, 1509-1589.

Vol. II., the Scottish Series, of the Reign of Elizabeth, 1589-1603; an Appendix to the Scottish Series, 1543-1592; and the State Papers relating to Mary Queen of Scots during her Detention in England, 1568-1587.

Two volumes of State Papers relating to Scotland, embracing the period between 1509 and 1603, were edited by Mr. Markham Thorpe in 1858. In the second volume are notices of the State Papers relating to Mary Queen of Scots, now in the Public Record Office.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS relating to IRELAND, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by Hans Claude Hamilton, Esq., F.S.A. 1860-1867.

Vol. I.—1509-1573.

Vol. II.—1574-1585.

Two volumes, of Irish State Papers, between 1509 and 1585, have been published under the editorship of Mr. Hans Claude Hamilton; and another volume is in progress.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, COLONIAL SERIES, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office, and elsewhere. Edited by W. Noel Sainsbury, Esq. 1860-1862.

Vol. I.—America and West Indies, 1574-1660.

Vol. II.—East Indies, China, and Japan, 1513-1616.

The first volume of a Calendar of Colonial Papers relating to America and the West Indies, from 1574 to 1660, was published in 1860. The second volume, relating to the East Indies, China, and Japan, from 1513 to 1616, appeared in 1862. The above portion includes an analysis of all Papers from the three great archives of the Public Record Office, the India Office, and the British Museum. The third volume is in the press. The regular series of the East India Papers in the Public Record Office are calendared to the year 1623; those relating to the same subject in the Domestic Correspondence to 1625; and in the Foreign Correspondence to 1620; the Court Minutes of the East India Company to 1621, and the Original Correspondence in the India Office to 1620. Many undated Papers have been dated and arranged.

CALENDAR OF LETTERS AND PAPERS, FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC, OF THE REIGN OF HENRY VIII., preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office, the British Museum, &c. Edited by J. S. Brewer, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1862–1867.

Vol. I.—1509–1514.

Vol. II. (in Two Parts)—1515-1518. Vol. III. (in Two Parts)—1519-1523.

These volumes contain summaries of all State Papers and correspondence relating to the reign of Henry VIII., in the Public Record Office, of those formerly in the State Paper Office, in the British Museum, the Libraries of Oxford and Cambridge, and other public Libraries; and of all letters that have appeared in print in the works of Burnet, Strype, and others. In short, whatever authentic original material exists in England relative to the religious, political, parliamentary, or social history of the country during the reign of Henry VIII., whether despatches of ambassadors, or proceedings of the army, navy, treasury, or ordnance, or records of Parliament, appointments of officers, grants from the Crown, &c., will be found calendared in these volumes.

- CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, FOREIGN SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF EDWARD VI., preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by W. B. TURNBULL, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, and Correspondant du Comité Impérial des Travaux Historiques et des Sociétés Savantes de France. 1861.
- CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, FOREIGN SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF MARY, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office. Edited by W. B. TURNBULL, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, and Correspondant du Comité Impérial des Travaux Historiques et des Sociétés Savantes de France. 1861.

The two preceding volumes exhibit the negotiations of the English ambassadors with the courts of the Emperor Charles V. of Germany, of Henry II. of France, and of Philip II. of Spain. The affairs of several of the minor continental states here find various incidental illustrations of much interest.

A valuable series of Papers descriptive of the circumstances which attended the loss of Calais merits a special notice; while the progress of the wars in the north of France, into which England was dragged by her union with Spain, is narrated at some length. The domestic affairs of England are of course passed over in these volumes, which treat only of its relations with foreign powers.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS, FOREIGN SERIES, OF THE REIGN OF Elizabeth, preserved in Her Majesty's Public Record Office, &c. Edited by the Rev. Joseph Stevenson, M.A., of University College, Durham. 1863-1867.

Vol. IV.—1561-1562. Vol. I.—1558–1559. Vol. II.—1559–1560. Vol. V.—1562. Vol. III.—1560-1561.

These five volumes contain a descriptive catalogue of the foreign correspondence of Queen Elizabeth, from her accession in 1558, to 1563, of which the originals, drafts, or contemporary copies, are deposited in the Public Record originais, draits, or contemporary copies, are deposited in the Fublic Record Office. These documents are of the greatest value as exhibiting the position of England at one of the most interesting periods of history, in regard to its relations with France, Scotland, Spain, and Germany. They are of especial importance as illustrating not only the external but also the domestic affairs of France during the period which immediately preceded the outbreak of the first great war of religion under the Prince of Condé and the Duke of Conde religion under the Prince of Condé and the Duke of Guise.

CALENDAR OF THE CAREW PAPERS, preserved in Lambeth Library. Edited by J. S. Brewer, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London; and WILLIAM BULLEN, Esq. 1867-1868.

Vol. I.—1515–1574.

Vol. II.—1575–1588.

The Carew Papers relating to Ireland deposited in the Lambeth Library are not only unique in themselves, but are of great importance. Two volumes of the Calendar of these valuable Papers have already been published, extending from 1515 to 1588, which cannot fail to be welcome to all students of Irish history. Another volume is in the press.

CALENDAR OF LETTERS, DESPATCHES, AND STATE PAPERS, relating to the Negotiations between England and Spain, preserved in the Archives at Simancas, and elsewhere. Edited by G. A. BERGENROTH. 1862-1867.

> Vol. I.—Hen. VII.—1485–1509. Vol. II.—Hen. VIII.—1509-1525.

Mr. Bergenroth is engaged in compiling a Calendar of the Papers relating to England preserved in the archives of Simancas in Spain, and the corresponding portion removed from Simancas to Paris. It has been deemed essential to the completion of his work that Mr. Bergenroth should visit Madrid, and examine the Papers there, bearing on the reign of Henry VIII. The first volume contains the Spanish Papers of the reign of Henry VII., and the second volume the Papers of the first portion of the reign of Henry VIII.

CALENDAR OF STATE PAPERS AND MANUSCRIPTS, relating to ENGLISH AFFAIRS, preserved in the Archives of Venice, &c. Edited by RAWDON Brown, Esq. 1864-1867. Vol. I.—1202-1509.

Vol. II.—1509-1519.

Of the Papers in the Venetian archives, Mr. Rawdon Brown has already pub. shed two volumes of his Calendar, extending from 1202 to 1519, and has made considerable progress in the third volume. Mr. Brown's researches have brought to light a number of important documents relating to the various periods of English history, and his contributions to our historical literature are of the most interesting and important character.

THE CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND DURING THE MIDDLE AGES.

[ROYAL 8vo., half-bound. Price 10s. each Volume or Part.]

On 25 July 1822, the House of Commons presented an address to the Crown, stating that the editions of the works of our ancient historians were inconvenient and defective; that many of their writings still remained in manuscript, and, in some cases, in a single copy only. They added, "that an "uniform and convenient edition of the whole, published under His Majesty's "royal sanction, would be an undertaking honourable to His Majesty's reign, and conducive to the advancement of historical and constitutional know-"ledge; that the House therefore humbly besought His Majesty, that He would be graciously pleased to give such directions as His Majesty, in His "wisdom, might think fit, for the publication of a complete edition of the ancient historians of this realm, and assured His Majesty that whatever expense might be necessary for this purpose would be made good."

The Master of the Rolls, being very desirous that effect should be given to the resolution of the House of Commons, submitted to Her Majesty's Trensury in 1857 the plan above referred to for the publication of the ancient chronicles and memorials of the United Kingdom, and it was adopted accordingly. In selecting these works, it was considered right, in the first instance, to give preference to those of which the manuscripts were unique, or the materials of which would help to fill up blanks in English history for which no satisfactory and authentic information hitherto existed in any accessible form. One great object the Master of the Rolls had in view was to form a corpus historicum within reasonable limits, and which should be as complete as possible. In a subject of so vast a range, it was important that the historical student should be able to select such volumes as conformed with his own peculiar tastes and studies, and not be put to the expense of purchasing the whole collection; an inconvenience inseparable from any other plan than that which has been in this instance adopted.

Of the Chronicles and Memorials, the following volumes have been published. They embrace the period from the earliest time of British history down to the end of the reign of Henry VII.

1. THE CHRONICLE OF ENGLAND, by JOHN CAPGRAVE. Edited by the Rev. F. C. HINGESTON, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1858.

John Capgrave was prior of Lynn, in Norfolk, and provincial of the order of the Friars Hermits of England shortly before the year 1464. H's Chronicle extends from the creation of the world to the year 1417. As a record of the language spoken in Norfolk (for it is written in English), it is of considerable value.

2. CHRONICON MONASTERII DE ABINGDON. Vols. I. and II. Edited by the Rev. Joseph Stevenson, M.A., of University College, Durham, and Vicar of Leighton Buzzard. 1858.

This Chronicle traces the history of the great Benedictine monastery of Abingdon in Berkshire, from its foundation by King Ina of Wessex, to the reign of Richard I., shortly after which period the present narrative was drawn up by an inmate of the establishment. The author had access to the title-deeds of the house, and incorporates into his history various charters of the Saxon kings, which are of great importance as illustrating not only the history of the locality but that of the kingdom at large. The work is now printed for the first time.

3. LIVES OF EDWARD THE CONFESSOR. I.—La Estoire de Seint Aedward le Rei. II.—Vita Beati Edvardi Regis et Confessoris. III.—Vita Æduuardi Regis qui apud Westmonasterium requiescit. Edited by Henry Richards Luard, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1858.

The first is a poem in Norman French, containing 4,686 lines. It is addressed to Alianor, Queen of Henry III., and was probably written in the year 1245, on the occasion of the restoration of the church of Westminster. Nothing is known of the author.

The second, also by an anonymous author, was apparently written for Queen Edith, between the years 1066 and 1074, during the pressure of the suffering brought on the Saxons by the Norman conquest. It notices many facts not found in other writers, and some which differ considerably from the usual accounts.

The third is an anonymous poem, containing 536 lines, written between the years 1440 and 1450, by command of Henry VI., to whom it is dedicated. Though it does not throw any new light on the reign of Edward the Confessor, yet it is valuable as a specimen of the Latin poetry of the time.

Monumenta Franciscana; scilicet, I.—Thomas de Eccleston de Adventu Fratrum Minorum in Angliam. II.—Adæ de Marisco Epistolæ. III.—Registrum Fratrum Minorum Londoniæ. Edited by J. S. Brewer, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1858.

This volume contains the original materials for the history of the settlement of the order of Saint Francis in England, the letters of Adam de Marisco, and other papers connected with the foundation and diffusion of this great body. It has been the aim of the editor to collect whatever historical materials could be found in this country, in the British Museum, or elsewhere, towards illustrating a period of the national history for which only scanty materials exist. None of these works have been before printed.

5. FASCICULI ZIZANIORUM MAGISTRI JOHANNIS WYCLIF CUM TRITICO. Ascribed to THOMAS NETTER, of WALDEN, Provincial of the Carmelite Order in England, and Confessor to King Henry the Fifth. Edited by the Rev. W. W. Shirley, M.A., Tutor and late Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford. 1858.

This work derives its principal value from the fact that it is the only contemporaneous account of the rise of the Lollards. At the time when it was written, the disputes of the schoolmen had been extended to the field of theology, and they appear both in the writings of Wycliff and in those of his adversaries.

and they appear both in the writings of Wycliff and in those of his adversaries.

Wycliff's little bundles of tares are not less metaphysical than theological, and the conflict between Nominalists and Realists rages side by side with the conflict between the different interpreters of Scripture. The "Fasciculi Zizaniorum" gives a good idea of the controversies which were carried on at the end of the 14th and the beginning of the 15th centuries.

6. THE BUIK OF THE CRONICLIS OF SCOTLAND; or, A Metrical Version of the History of Hector Boece; by WILLIAM STEWART. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by W. B. TURNBULL, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barristerat-Law. 1858.

This is a metrical translation of a Latin Prose Chronicle, and was written in the first half of the 16th century. The narrative begins with the earliest legends, and ends with the death of James I. of Scotland, and the "evil ending of the traitors that slew him." Strict accuracy of statement is not to be looked for in such a work as this; but the stories of the colonization of Spain, Ireland, and Scotland are interesting if not true; and the chronicle is valuable as a reflection of the manners, sentiments, and character of the age in which it was composed.

The peculiarities of the Scottish dialect are well illustrated in this metrical version of Boece's work, and the student of language will here find ample materials for comparison with the English dialects of the same period, and with modern lowland Scotch.

7. JOHANNIS CAPGRAVE LIBER DE ILLUSTRIBUS HENRICIS. Edited by the Rev. F. C. HINGESTON, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1858.

This work is dedicated to Henry VI. of England, who appears to have been, in the author's estimation, the greatest of all the Henries. It is divided into three distinct parts, each having its own separate dedication. The first part relates only to the history of the Empire, and extends from the election of Henry I., the Fowler, to the end-of the reign of the Emperor Henry VI. The second part is devoted to English history, and extends from the accession of Henry I. in the year 1100, to the year 1446 which was the twenty-fourth year of the reign of King Henry VI. The third part contains the lives of illustrious men who have borne the name of Henry in various parts of the world.

Capgrave was born in 1393, in the reign of Richard II, and lived during the Wars of the Roses, for the history of which period his work is of some value.

8. HISTORIA MONASTERII S. AUGUSTINI CANTUARIENSIS, by THOMAS OF ELMHAM, formerly Monk and Treasurer of that Foundation. Edited by Charles Hardwick, M.A., Fellow of St. Catharine's Hall, and Christian Advocate in the University of Cambridge. 1858.

This history extends from the arrival of St. Augustine in Kent until 1191. Prefixed is a chronology as far as 1418, which shows in outline what was to have been the character of the work when completed. The only copy known is in the possession of the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The author's name does not occur; but the internal evidence in the Chronicle shows that he was a monk of St. Augustine's, Canterbury, and treasurer of that foundation. He was connected with Norfolk, and most probably with Elmham, whence he derived his name.

9. EULOGIUM (HISTORIARUM SIVE TEMPORIS): Chronicon ab Orbe condito usque ad Annum Domini 1366; a Monacho quodam Malmesbiriensi exaratum. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by F. S. HAYDON, Esq., B.A. 1858-1868.

This is a Latin Chronicle extending from the Creation to the latter part of the reign of Edward III., and written by a monk of the Abbey of Malmesbury, in Wiltshire, about the year 1867 A continuation, carrying the history of England down to the year 1413, was added in the former half of the fifteenth century by an author whose name is not at present known. The original Chronicle is divided into five books. It contains a history of the world generally, but more especially of England down to the year 1366. The continuation extends the history down to the coronation of Henry V. The Eulogium itself is chiefly valuable as containing a history, by a contemporary, of the period between 1356 and 1366. The notices of events appear to have been written very soon after their occurrence. Among other interesting matter, the Chronicle contains a diary of the Poitiers campaign, evidently furnished by some person who accompanied the army of the Black Prince. The continuation of the Chronicle is also the work of a contemporary, and gives a very interesting account of the reigns of Richard II. and Henry IV. It is believed to be the earliest authority for the statement that the latter monarch died in the Jerusalem Chamber at Westminster.

10. MEMORIALS OF HENRY THE SEVENTH: Bernardi Andreæ Tholosatis Vita Regis Henrici Septimi; necnon alia quædam ad eundem Regem spectantia. Edited by James Gairdner, Esq. 1858.

The contents of these volumes are—(1) a life of Henry VII., by his poet laureate and historiographer, Bernard André, of Toulouse, with some compositions in verse, of which he is supposed to have been the author; (2) the journals of Roger Machado during certain embassies on which he was sent by Henry VII. to Spain and Brittany, the first of which had reference to the marriage of the King's son, Arthur, with Catharine of Arragon; (3) two curious reports by envoys sent to Spain in the year 1505 touching the succession to the Crown of Castile, and a project of marriage between Henry VII. and the Queen of Naples; and (4) an account of Philip of Castile's reception in England in 1506. Besides these, other documents of interest in connexion with the period are given in an appendix.

 Memorials of Henry the Fifth. I.—Vita Henrici Quinti, Roberto Redmanno auctore. II.—Versus Rhythmici in laudem Regis Henrici Quinti. III.—Elmhami Liber Metricus de Henrico V. Edited by Charles A. Cole, Esq. 1858.

This volume contains three treatises which more or less illustrate the history of the reign of Henry V., viz.: A Life by Robert Redman; a Metrical Chronicle by Thomas Elmham, prior of Lenton, a contemporary author; Versus Rhythmici, written apparently by a monk of Westminster Abbey, who was also a contemporary of Henry V. These works a reprinted for the first time in the present volume.

12. Munimenta Gildhallæ Londoniensis; Liber Albus, Liber Custumarum, et Liber Horn, in archivis Gildhallæ asservati. Vol. I., Liber Albus. Vol. II. (in Two Parts), Liber Custumarum. Vol. III., Translation of the Anglo-Norman Passages in Liber Albus, Glossaries, Appendices, and Index. Edited by Henry Thomas Riley, Esq., M.A., Barrister-at-Law. 1859–1862.

The manuscript of the Liber Albus, compiled by John Carpenter, Common Clerk of the City of London in the year 1419, a large folio volume, is preserved in the Record Room of the City of London. This work gives an account of the laws, regulations, and institutions of that City in the twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and early part of the fifteenth centuries.

The Liber Custumatum was compiled probably by various hands in the early part of the fourteenth century during the reign of Edward II. The manuscript, a folio volume, is also preserved in the record room of the City of London, though some portion of it, in its original state, borrowed from the City in the reign of Queen Elizabeth and never returned, now forms part of the Cottonian MS. Claudius D. II. in the British Museum. This work gives an account of the laws, regulations, and institutions of the City of London in the twelfth, thirteenth, and early part of the fourteenth centuries.

13. CHRONICA JOHANNIS DE OXENEDES. Edited by Sir HENRY ELLIS, K.H. 1859.

Although this Chronicle tells of the arrival of Hengist and Horsa in England in the year 449, yet it substantially begins with the reign of King Alfred, and comes down to the year 1292, where it ends abruptly. The history is particularly valuable for its notices of events in the eastern portions of the kingdom, which are not to be elsewhere obtained, and some curious facts are mentioned relative to the floods in that part of England, which are confirmed in the Friesland Chronicle of Anthony Heinrich, pastor of the Island of Mohr.

14. A COLLECTION OF POLITICAL POEMS AND SONGS RELATING TO ENGLISH HISTORY, FROM THE ACCESSION OF EDWARD III. TO THE REIGN OF HENRY VIII. Vols. I. and II. Edited by Thomas Wright, Esq., M.A. 1859-1861.

These poems are perhaps the most interesting of all the historical writings of the period, though they cannot be relied on for accuracy of statement. They are very various in character; some of them are upon religious subjects, some may be called satires, and some give no more than a court scandal; but as a whole they present a very fair picture of society, and of the relations of the different classes to one another.

The period comprised is in itself very interesting, and brings us, through the decline of the feudal system, to what may be considered the beginning of our modern history. The songs in old English are of considerable interest to the philologist.

15. The "OPUS TERTIUM," "OPUS MINUS," &c., of ROGER BACON. Edited by J. S. Brewer, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1859.

This is the celebrated treatise—which, up to this time, had never been printed—so frequently referred to by the great philosopher in his works. It contains the fullest details we possess of the life and labours of Roger Bacon. The volume also contains a fragment by the same author, supposed to be unique, the "Compendium Studii Theologia."

16. Bartholomæi de Cotton, Monachi Norwicensis, Historia Anglicana. 449-1298. Edited by Henry Richards Luard, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1859.

The author, a monk of Norwich, has here given us a Chronicle of England from the arrival of the Saxons in 449 to the year 1298, in or about which year it appears that he died. The latter portion of this history (the whole of the reign of Edward I. more especially) is of great value, as the writer was contemporary with the events which he records. An Appendix contains several illustrative documents connected with the previous narrative.

17. Brut y Tywysogion; or, The Chronicle of the Princes of Wales. Edited by the Rev. J. WILLIAMS AB ITHEL. 1860.

This work, which is also known as "The Chronicle of the Princes of Wales," has been attributed to Caradoc of Llancarvan, who flourished about the middle of the twelfth century. It is written in the ancient Welsh language, and begins with the abdication and death of Caedwala at Rome, in the year 681, and continues the history down to the subjugation of Wales by Edward I., about the year 1282.

18. A COLLECTION OF ROYAL AND HISTORICAL LETTERS DURING THE REIGN OF HENRY IV. Edited by the Rev. F. C. HINGESTON, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1860.

This volume, like all the others in the series containing a miscellaneous selection of letters, is valuable on account of the light it throws upon biographical history, and the familiar view it presents of characters, manners, and events of the time. The period (1399 to 1413) required much elucidation; and the volume will materially contribute to that desirable end.

19. THE REPRESSOR OF OVER MUCH BLAMING OF THE CLERGY. By REGINALD PECOCK, sometime Bishop of Chichester. Vols. L and II. Edited by Churchill Babington, B.D., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1860.

The "Repressor" may be considered the earliest piece of good theological disquisition of which our English prose literature boast. The author was born about the end of the fourteenth century, was consecrated Bishop of St. Asaph in the year 1444, and translated to the see of Chichester in 1450. While Bishop of St. Asaph, he zealously defended his brother prelates from the attacks of those who censured the bishops for their neglect of duty. He maintained that it was no part of a bishop's functions to appear in the pulpit, and that his time might be more profitably spent, and his dignity better maintained, in the performance of works of a higher character. Among those who thought differently were the Lollards, and it is against their general doctrines that the "Repressor" is directed. Pecock took up a position midway between that of the Roman Church and that of the modern Anglican Church; but his work is interesting chiefly because it gives a full account of the views of the Lollards and of the arguments by which they were supported, and because it assists us to ascertain the state of feeling which ultimately led to the Reformation. Apart from religious matters, the light thrown upon contemporaneous history is very small, but the "Repressor" has very great value for the philologist, as it tells us what were the characteristics of the language in use among the cultivated Englishmen of the fifteenth century. Pecock, though an opponent of the Lollards, showed a certain spirit of toleration, for which he received, towards the end of his life, the usual mediaeval reward—persecution.

20. Annales Cambrie. Edited by the Rev. J. Williams ab Ithel. 1860.

These annals, which are in Latin, commence in the year 447, and come down to the year 1288. The earlier portion appears to be taken from an Irish Chronicle, which was also used by Tigemade, and by the compiler of the Annals of Ulster. During its first century it contains scarcely anything relating to Britain, the earliest direct concurrence with English history is relative to the mission of Augustine. Its notices throughout, though brief, are valuable. These annals were probably written at St. David's, by Blegewryd, Archdeacon of Llandaff, the most learned man in his day in all Cymru.

21. THE WORKS OF GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by J. S. Brewer, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. Vols. V. and VI. TOPOGRAPHIA HIBERNICA ET EXPUGNATIO HIBERNICA. Edited by the Rev. James F. Dimock, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire. 1861-1868.

The first three volumes contain the historical works of Gerald du Barry, who lived in the reigns of Henry II., Richard I., and John, and attempted to reestablish the independence of Wales by restoring the see of St. Davids to its ancient primacy. His works are of a very miscellaneous nature, both in prose and verse, and are remarkable chiefly for the racy and original anecdotes which they contain relating to contemporaries. He is the only Welsh writer of any importance who has contributed so much to the mediæval literature of this country, or assumed, in consequence of his nationality, so free and independent a tone. His frequent travels in Italy, in France, in Ireland, and in Wales, gave him opportunities for observation which did not generally fall to the lot of mediæval writers in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, and of these observations Giraldus has made due use.

Only extracts from these treatises have been printed before, and almost all of them are taken from unique manuscripts.

The Topographia Hibernica is the result of Giraldus' two visits to Ireland. The first in the year 1183, the second in 1185-6, when he accompanied Prince John into that country. Curious as this treatise is, Mr. Dimock is of opinion that it ought not to be accepted as sober truthful history, for Giraldus himself states that truth was not his main object, and that he compiled the work for the purpose of sounding the praises of Henry the Second. Elsewhere, however, he declares that he had stated nothing in the Topographia of the truth of which he was not well assured, either by his own eyesight or by the testimony, with all diligence elicited, of the most trustworthy and authentic men in the country; that though he did not put just the same full faith in their reports as in what he had himself seen, yet, as they only related what they had themselves seen, he could not but believe such credible witnesses. A very interesting portion of this treatise is devoted to the animals of Ireland. It shows that he was a very accurate and acute observer, and his descriptions are given in a way that a scientific naturalist of the present day could hardly improve upon.

present day could hardly improve upon.

The Expugnatio was written about the year 1188, and may be regarded rather as a great epic than a sober relation of facts occurring in his own days. No one can peruse it without coming to the conclusion that it is rather a poetical fiction than a prosaic truthful history.

22. LETTERS AND PAPERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE WARS OF THE ENGLISH IN FRANCE DURING THE REIGN OF HENRY THE SIXTH, KING OF ENGLAND. Vol. I., and Vol. II. (in Two Parts). Edited by the Rev. Joseph Stevenson, M.A., of University College, Durham, and Vicar of Leighton Buzzard. 1861–1864.

The letters and papers contained in these volumes are derived chiefly from originals or contemporary copies extant in the Bibliothèque Impérial, and the Depôt des Archives, in Paris. They illustrate the line of policy adopted by John Duke of Bedford and his successors during their government of Normandy, and such other provinces of France as had been acquired by Henry V. We may here trace, step by step, the gradual declension of the English power, until we are prepared to read of its final overthrow.

23. THE ANGLO-SAXON CHRONICLE, ACCORDING TO THE SEVERAL ORIGINAL AUTHORITIES. Vol. I., Original Texts. Vol. II., Translation. Edited and translated by Benjamin Thorpe, Esq., Member of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Munich, and of the Society of Netherlandish Literature at Leyden. 1861.

This Chronicle, extending from the earliest history of Britain to the year 1154, is justly the boast of England; for no other nation can produce any history, written in its own vernacular, at all approaching it, either in antiquity, truthfulness, or extent, the historical books of the Bible alone excepted. There are at present six independent manuscripts of the Saxon Chronicle, ending in different years, and written in different parts of the country. In the present edition, the text of each manuscript is printed in columns on the same page, so that the student may see at a glance the various changes which occur in orthography, whether arising from locality or age.

24. LETTERS AND PAPERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE REIGNS OF RICHARD III. AND HENRY VII. Vols. I. and II. Edited by James Gairdner, Esq. 1861-1863.

The Papers are derived from MSS. in the Public Record Office, the British Museum, and other repositories. The period to which they refer is unusually destitute of chronicles and other sources of historical information, so that the light obtained from these documents is of special importance. The principal contents of the volumes are some diplomatic Papers of Richard III.; correspondence between Henry VII. and Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain; documents relating to Edmund de la Pole, Earl of Suffolk; and a portion of the correspondence of James IV. of Scotland.

25. LETTERS OF BISHOP GROSSETESTE, illustrative of the Social Condition of his Time. Edited by HENRY RICHARDS LUARD, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1861.

The Letters of Robert Grosseteste (131 in number) are here collected from various sources, and arranged in chronological order. They range in date from about 1210 to 1253, and relate to various matters connected not only with the political history of England during the reign of Henry III, but with its ecclesiastical condition. They refer especially to the diocese of Lincoln, of which Grosseteste was bishop. These Letters have not hitherto been collected, and the greater portion of them are now printed for the first time.

26. DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE OF MANUSCRIPTS RELATING TO THE HISTORY OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND. Vol. I. (in Two Parts); Anterior to the Norman Invasion. Vol. II.; 1066-1200. By Thomas Duffus Hardy, Esq., Deputy Keeper of the Public Records. 1862-1865.

The object of this work is to publish notices of all known sources of British history, both printed and unprinted, in one continued sequence. The materials, when historical (as distinguished from biographical), are arranged under the year in which the latest event is recorded in the chronicle or history, and not under the period in which its author, real or supposed, flourished. Biographies are enumerated under the year in which the person commemorated died, and not under the year in which the life was written. This arrangement has two advantages: the materials for any given period may be seen at a glance; and if the reader knows the time when an author wrote, and the number of years that had elapsed between the date of the events and the time the writer flourished, he will generally be enabled to form a fair estimate of the comparative value of the narrative itself. A briefanalysis of each work has been added when deserving it, in which the original portions are distinguished from those which are mere compilations. When possible, the sources are indicated from which such compilations have been derived. A biographical sketch of the author of each piece has been added, and a brief notice has also been given of such British authors as have written on historical subjects.

27. ROYAL AND OTHER HISTORICAL LETTERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF THE REIGN OF HENRY III. From the Originals in the Public Record Office. Vol. I., 1216-1235. Vol. II., 1236-1272. Selected and edited by the Rev. W. W. Shirley, D.D., Regius Professor in Ecclesiastical History, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. 1862-1866.

The letters contained in these volumes are derived chiefly from the ancient correspondence formerly preserved in the Tower of London, and now deposited in the Public Record Office. They illustrate the political history of England during the growth of its liberties, and throw considerable light upon the personal history of Simon de Montfort. The affairs of France form the subject of many of these letters, more especially in regard to the province of Gascony. The entire collection consists of nearly 700 documents, the greater portion of which is now printed for the first time.

28. Chronica Monasterii S. Albani. — 1. Thomæ Walsingham Historia Anglicana; Vol. I., 1272-1381: Vol. II., 1381-1422. 2. Willelmi Rishanger Chronica et Annales, 1259-1307. 3. Johannis de Trokelowe et Henrici de Blaneforde Chronica et Annales, 1259-1296; 1307-1324; 1392-1406. 4. Gesta Abbatum Monasterii S. Albani, a Thoma Walsingham, regnante Ricardo Secundo, ejusdem Ecclesiæ Præcentore, compilata; Vol. I., 793-1290: Vol. II., 1290-1349. Edited by Henry Thomas Riley, Esq., M.A., of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge; and of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1863-1867.

In the first two volumes is a history of England, from the death of Henry III. to the death of Henry V., written by Thomas Walsingham, precentor of St. Albans and prior of the Cell of Wymundham, belonging to that abbey. Walsingham's work is printed from MS. VII. in the Arundel Collection in the College of Arms, London, a manuscript of the fifteenth century, collated with MS. 13 E. IX. in the King's Library, in the British Museum, and MS. VII. in the Parker Collection of Manuscripts at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge

In the third volume is a Chronicle of English History, from 1259 to 1306, attributed to William Rishanger, monk of Saint Albans, who lived in the reign of Edward I., printed from the Cottonian Manuscript, Faustina B. IX. (of the fourteenth century) in the British Museum, collated with MS. 14 C. VII. (fols. 219-231) in the King's Library, British Museum, and the Cottonian Manuscript Claudius E. III., fols. 306-331: Also an account of transactions attending the award of the kingdom of Scotland to John Balliol by King Edward I., 1291-1292, from MS. Cotton. Claudius, D. VI., attributed to William Rishanger above mentioned, but on no sufficient ground: A short Chronicle of English History, from 1292 to 1300, by an unknown hand, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: A short Chronicle from 1297 to 1307, in the same volume, Willelmi Rishanger Gesta Edwardi Primi Regis Angliæ, from MS. 14 C. I. in the Royal Library, and MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI., with an addition of Annales Regum Anglise, probably by the same hand: A fragment of a Chronicle of English History, 1299, 1300, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: A fragment of a Chronicle of English History, 1295 to 1300, from MS. Claudius D. VI.: A fragment of a Chronicle of English History, 1285 to 1307, from MS. 14 C. I. in the Royal Library.

In the fourth volume is a Chronicle of English History, by an anonymous writer, 1259 to 1296, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: Also Annals of King Miles, 1239 (1236), from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: Albans, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: A continuation of Trokelowe's Annals, 1323, 1324, by Henricus de Blaneforde, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI.: Also a full Chronicle of English History, by an anonymous writer of St. Albans, 1392 to 1406, from MS. VII. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge: and an account of the past benefactors of St. Albans, written in the early part of the fifteenth century, from MS. VI. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

In the fifth volume begins a history of the abbots of St. Albans, from 793 to the close of the fourteenth century, compiled by Thomas Walsingham, præcentor of St. Albans, from MS. Cotton. Claudius E. IV., in the British Museum. This is continued in the sixth volume.

29. CHRONICON ABBATIÆ EVESHAMENSIS, AUCTORIBUS DOMINICO PRIORE EVESHAMIÆ ET THOMA DE MARLEBERGE ABBATE, A FUNDATIONE AD Annum 1213, una cum Continuatione ad Annum 1418. Edited by the Rev. W. D. MACRAY, M.A., Bodleian Library, Oxford.

> The Chronicle of Evesham illustrates the history of that important monastery from its foundation by Egwin, about 690, to the year 1418. Its chief feature is an autobiography, which makes us acquainted with the inner daily life of a great abbey, such as but rarely has been recorded. Interspersed are many notices of general, personal, and local history which will be read with much interest. This work exists in a single MS., and is now for the first time printed.

80. Ricardi de Cirencestria Speculum Historiale de Gestis Regum Anglie. Vol. I., 447-871. Edited by John E. B. Mayor, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1863.

> Of the compiler of this work, which is in four parts, very little is known. In the prologue he calls himself Richard, a monk of Westminster, and at the end of the first part, Richard of Cirencester, a monk of St. Peter's, Westminster. One volume only, containing the first three books, has at present been published, the remainder is in the press, and will shortly appear. There is a continuation of the work down to the year 1348, which in due time will also be printed.

31. YEAR BOOKS OF THE REIGN OF EDWARD THE FIRST. Years 20-21. 30-31, and 32-33. Edited and translated by ALFRED JOHN HORWOOD, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1863-1866.

> The volumes known as the "Year Books" contain reports in Norman-French of cases argued and decided in the Courts of Common Law. They may be considered to a great extent as the "lex non scripta" of England, and have been held in the highest veneration by the ancient sages of the law, and were received by them as the repositories of the first recorded judgments and dicts of the great legal luminaries of past ages. They are also worthy of the attention of the general reader on account of the historical information and the notices of public and private persons which they contain, as well as the light which they throw on ancient manners and customs.

32. NARRATIVES OF THE EXPULSION OF THE ENGLISH FROM NORMANDY, 1449-1450.—Robertus Blondelli de Reductione Normannise: Le Recouvrement de Normendie, par Berry, Hérault du Roy: Conferences between the Ambassadors of France and England. Edited, from MSS. in the Imperial Library at Paris, by the Rev. Joseph Stevenson, M.A., of University College, Durham. 1863.

This volume contains the narrative of an eye-witness who details with considerable power and minuteness the circumstances which attended the final expulsion of the English from Normandy in the year 1450. The history commences with the infringement of the truce by the capture of Fougères, and ends with the battle of Formigny and the embarkation of the Duke of Somerset. The whole period embraced is less than two years.

33. HISTORIA ET CARTULARIUM MONASTERII S. PETRI GLOUCESTRIE. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by W. H. HART, Esq., F.S.A., Membre correspondant de la Société des Antiquaires de Normandie. 1863-1867.

This work consists of two parts, the History and the Cartulary of the Monastery of St. Peter, Gloucester.

The history furnishes an account of the monastery from its foundation, in the year 681, to the early part of the reign of Richard II., together with a calendar of donations and benefactions. It treats principally of the affairs of the monastery, but occasionally matters of general history are introduced. Its authorship has generally been assigned to Walter Froucester, the twentieth abbot, but without any foundation.

84. ALEXANDRI NECKAM DE NATURIS RERUM LIBRI DUO; WITH NECKAM'S POEM, DE LAUDIBUS DIVINÆ SAPIENTIÆ. Edited by Thomas WRIGHT, Esq., M.A. 1863.

Neckam was a man who devoted himself to science, such as it was in the twelfth century.

In the "De Naturis Rerum" are to be found what may be called the rudiments of many sciences mixed up with much error and ignorance. Neckam was not thought infallible, even by his contemporaries, for Roger Bacon remarks of him, "this Alexander in many things wrote what was true and useful; but he neither "can nor ought by just title to be reckoned among authorities."

Neckam, however, had sufficient independence of thought to differ from some of the schoolmen who in his time considered themselves the only judges of literature. He had his own views in morals, and in giving us a glimpse of them, as well as of his other opinions, he throws much light upon the manners, customs, and general tone of thought prevalent in the twelfth century.

The poem entitled "De Laudibus Divinæ Sapientiæ" appears to be a metrical paraphrase or abridgment of the "De Naturis Rerum." It is written in the elegiac metre; and though there are in it many lines which violate classical rules, it is, as a whole, above the ordinary standard of mediæval Latin.

35. LEECHDOMS, WORTCUNNING, AND STARCRAFT OF EARLY ENGLAND; being a Collection of Documents illustrating the History of Science in this Country before the Norman Conquest. Vols. I., II., and III. Collected and edited by the Rev. T. OSWALD COCKAYNE, M.A., of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1864-1866.

This work illustrates not only the history of science, but the history of superstition. In addition to the information bearing directly upon the medical skill and medical faith of the times, there are many passages which incidentally throw light upon the general mode of life and ordinary diet. The volumes are interesting not only in their scientific, but also in their social aspect. The manuscripts from which they have been printed are valuable to the Anglo-Saxon scholar for the illustrations they afford of the Anglo-Saxon orthography.

36. Annales Monastici. Vol. I.:—Annales de Margan, 1066-1232; Annales de Theokesberia, 1066-1263; Annales de Burton, 1004-1263.

Vol. II.:—Annales Monasterii de Wintonia, 519-1277; Annales Monasterii de Waverleia, 1-1291. Vol. III.:—Annales Prioratus de Dunstaplia, 1-1297; Annales Monasterii de Bermundeseia, 1042-1432.

Edited by Henry Richards Luard, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, and Registrary of the University, Cambridge. 1864-1866.

The present collection of Monastic Annals embraces all the more important chronicles compiled in the different religious houses in England during the thirteenth century. These distinct works are seven in number, and the extreme period which they embrace ranges from the year 1 to 1432, although they refer more especially to the reigns of John, Henry III., and Edward I. Some of these narratives have already appeared in print, but others are now printed for the first time.

37. MAGNA VITA S. HUGONIS EPISCOPI LINCOLNIENSIS. From Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, and the Imperial Library, Paris. Edited by the Rev. James F. Dimock, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire. 1864.

This work contains a number of very curious and interesting incidents, and, being the work of a contemporary, is very valuable, not only as a truthful biography of a celebrated ecclesiastic, but as the work of a man who, from personal knowledge, gives notices of passing events, as well as of individuals who were then taking active part in public affairs.

The author, in all probability, was Adam Abbot of Evesham. He was domestic chaplain and private confessor of Bishop Hugh, and in these capacities he was admitted to the closest intimacy. Bishop Hugh was Prior of Witham for 11 years before he became Bishop of Lincoln. His consecration took place on the 21st September 1186; he died on the 16th of November 1200; and was canonized in 1220.

88. CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF THE REIGN OF RICHARD THE FIRST.

Vol. I.:—ITINERARIUM PEREGRINORUM ET GESTA REGIS RICARDI.

Vol. II.:—EPISTOLÆ CANTUARIENSES; the Letters of the Prior and Convent of Christ Church, Canterbury; 1187 to 1199. Edited by WILLIAM STUBBS, M.A., Vicar of Navestock, Essex, and Lambeth Librarian. 1864-1865.

The authorship of the Chronicle in Vol. I., hitherto ascribed to Geoffrey Vinesauf, is now more correctly ascribed to Richard, Canon of the Holy Trinity of London. The narrative extends from 1187 to 1199; but its chief interest consists in the minute and authentic narrative which it furnishes us of the exploits of Richard I., from his departure from England in December 1189 to his death in 1199. The author states in his prologue that he was an eye-witness of much that he records; and various incidental circumstances which occur in the course of the narrative confirm this assertion.

The Letters in Vol. II.; written between 1187 and 1199, are of value as furnishing authentic materials for the history of the ecclesiastical condition of England during the reign of Richard I. They had their origin in a dispute which arose from the attempts of Baldwin and Hubert, archbishops of Canterbury, to found a college of secular canons, a project which gave great umbrage to the monks of Canterbury, who saw in it a design to supplant them in their function of metropolitan chapter. These letters are printed, for the first time, from a MS. belonging to the archiepiscopal library at Lambeth.

39. RECUEIL DES CRONIQUES ET ANCHIENNES ISTORIES DE LA GRANT BRE-TAIGNE A PRESENT NOMME ENGLETERRE, PAR JEHAN DE WAURIN. From Albina to 688. Edited by William Hardy, Esq., F.S.A. 1864. 40. A COLLECTION OF THE CHRONICLES AND ANCIENT HISTORIES OF GREAT-BRITAIN, NOW CALLED ENGLAND, by JOHN DE WAVRIN. From Albina to 688. (Translation of the preceding.) Edited and translated by WILLIAM HARDY, Esq., F.S.A. 1864.

This curious chronicle extends from the fabulous period of history down to the return of Edward IV. to England in the year 1471, after the second deposition of Henry VI. The manuscript from which the text of this work is taken is preserved in the Imperial Library at Paris, and is believed to be the only complete and nearly contemporary copy now in existence. The work, as originally bound, was comprised in six volumes, since rebound in morocco in 12 volumes, folio maximo, vellum, and is illustrated with exquisite miniatures, vignettes, and initial letters. It was written towards the end of the fifteenth century, having been expressly executed for Louis de Bruges, Seigneur de la Gruthuyse and Earl of Winchester, from whose cabinet it passed into the library of Louis XII. at Blois. This work has also been translated into English.

 POLYCHRONICON RANULPHI HIGDEN, with Trevisa's Translation. Vol. I. Edited by Churchill Babington, B.D., Senior Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1865.

This is one of the many mediæval chronicles which assume the character of a history of the world. It begins with the creation and is brought down to the author's own time, the reign of Edward III. Prefixed to the historical portion of the work is a chapter devoted to geography, in which is given a description of every known land.

To say that the Polychronicon was written in the fourteenth century is to say that it is not free from inaccuracies. It has, however, a value apart from its intrinsic merits. It enables us to form a very fair estimate of the knowledge of history and geography which well-informed readers of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries possessed, for it was then the standard work on general history.

The two English translations, which are printed with the original Latin, afford interesting illustrations of the gradual change of our language, for one was made in the fourteenth century, the other in the fifteenth. The differences between Trevisa's version and that of the unknown writer are often considerable.

42. LE LIVERE DE REIS DE BRITTANIE E LE LIVERE DE REIS DE ENGLETERE. Edited by John Glover, M.A., Vicar of Brading, Isle of Wight, formerly Librarian of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1865.

These two treatises, though they cannot rank as independent narratives, are nevertheless valuable as careful abstracts of previous historians, especially "Le Livere de Reis de Engletere." Some various readings are given which are interesting to the philologist as instances of semi-Saxonized French.

It is supposed that Peter of Ickham must have been the author, but no certain conclusion on that point has been arrived at.

43. CHRONICA MONASTERII DE MELSA, AB ANNO 1150 USQUE AD ANNUM 1406. Vols. I. and II. Edited by Edward Augustus Bond, Esq., Assistant Keeper of the Manuscripts, and Egerton Librarian, British Museum. 1866–1867.

The Abbey of Meaux was a Cistercian house, and the work of its abbot is both curious and valuable. It is a faithful and often minute record of the establishment of a religious community, of its progress in forming an ample revenue, of its struggles to maintain its acquisitions, and of its relations to the governing institutions of the country. In addition to the private affairs of the monastery some light is thrown upon the public events of the time, which are however kept distinct, and appear at the end of the history of each abbot's administration.

distinct, and appear at the end of the history of each abbot's administration.

Two volumes of the work are published. The text has been printed from what is said to be the autograph of the original compiler, Thomas de Burton, the nineteenth abbot.

44. MATTHÆI PARISIENSIS HISTORIA ANGLORUM, SIVE, UT VULGO DICITUR, HISTORIA MINOR. Vols. I. and II. 1067-1245. Edited by Sir Frederic Madden, K.H., Keeper of the Department of Manuscripts, British Museum. 1866.

The exact date at which this work was written is, according to the chronicler, 1250. The history is of considerable value as an illustration of the period during which the author lived, and contains a good summary of the events which followed the Conquest. This minor chronicle is, however, based on another work (also written by Matthew Paris), which gives fuller details, and which has been called the 'Historia Major.' The chronicle now published, nevertheless, gives some information which is not to be found in the greater history.

45. LIBER MONASTERII DE HYDA: A CHRONICLE AND CHARTULARY OF HYDE ABBEY, WINCHESTER, 455-1023. Edited, from a Manuscript in the Library of the Earl of Macclesfield, by Edward Edwards, Esq. 1866.

The "Book of Hyde" is a compilation from much earlier sources, which are usually indicated with considerable care and precision. In many cases, however, the Hyde chronicler appears to correct, to qualify, or to amplify—either from tradition or from sources of information not now discoverable—the statements which, in substance, he adopts. He also mentions, and frequently quotes from, writers whose works are either entirely lost or at present known only by fragments. There is to be found, in the "Book of Hyde," much information relating to the reign of King Alfred which is not known to exist elsewhere. The volume

46. CHRONICON SCOTORUM: A CHRONICLE OF IRISH AFFAIRS, from the EARLIEST TIMES to 1135; with a SUPPLEMENT, containing the Events from 1141 to 1150. Edited, with a Translation, by WILLIAM MAUNSELL contains some curious specimens of Anglo-Saxon and Mediæval English.

There is, in this volume, a legendary account of the peopling of Ireland and of the adventures which befell the various heroes who are said to have been connected with Irish history. The details are, however, very meagre both for this period and for the time when history becomes more authentic. The plan adopted in the chronicle gives the appearance of an accuracy to which the earlier portions of the work cannot have any claim. The succession of events is marked, year by year, from A.M. 1599 to A.D. 1150. The principal events narrated in the later portion of the work are the invasious of foreigners and the wars of the Irish among themselves. The text has been printed from a MS. preserved in the library of Trinity College, Dublin, and written partly in Latin, partly in Irish.

47. THE CHEONICLE OF PIERRE DE LANGTOFT, IN FRENCH VERSE, FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD TO THE DEATH OF EDWARD I. Vol. I. Edited by Thomas Wright, Esq., M.A. 1866.

It is probable that Pierre de Langtoft was a canon of Bridlington, in Yorkshire, and that he lived in the reign of Edward I., and during a portion of the reign of Edward II. This chronicle is divided into three parts; in the first of which is an abridgment of Geoffrey of Monmouth's "Historia Britonum," in the second a history of the Anglo-Saxon and Norman kings, down to the death of Henry III., in the third a history of the reign of Edward I. The principal object of the work was apparently to show the justice of Edward's Scottish wars.

The language in which the chronicle is written is singularly corrupt, and is a curious specimen of the French of Yorkshire.

48. THE WAR OF THE GAEDHIL WITH THE GAILL, OR, THE INVASIONS OF IRELAND BY THE DANES AND OTHER NORSEMEN. Edited, with a Translation, by JAMES HENTHORN TODD, D.D., Senior Fellow of Trinity College, and Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University, Dublin. 1867.

The work in its present form, in the editor's opinion, is a comparatively modern version of an understadily ancient original. That it was compiled from commonstrate materials has been proved by curious incidental evidence. It is stand in the account given of the battle of Closterf that the full tide in Dublin Buy on the day of the battle (23 April, 1914) esincided with saurise; and that the returning tide in the evening aided considerably in the defeat of the Danes. The fact have verified by astronomical calculations, and the inference is that the author of the abronicle, if not bisneed an eye-witness, must have derived his information from those who were eye-witnesse.

The contents of the work are sufficiently described in its title. The story is told after the manuer of the Seandinavian Sagas, with poems and fragments of posses introduced into the proce narrative.

40. Genta Regis Henrici Secundi Benedicti Abbatis. The Chronicle of the Region of Henry II. and Richard I., 1169-1192; known under the name of Benedict of Peterborough. Vols. I. and II. Edited by William Studies, M.A., Region Professor of Modern History, Oxford, and Lambeth Librarian. 1867.

This is a chronicle of the reigns of Henry II. and Richard I., known commonly under the name of Benedict of Peterborough, and is one of the best existing specimens of a class of historical compositions which is of the first importance to the genuine student.

50), MUNIMENTA ACADEMICA, OR, DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATIVE OF ACADEMICAL LIVE AND STUDIES AT OXFORD (in Two Parts). Edited by the Rev. Ilensy Anstry, M.A., Vicar of St. Wendron, Cornwall, and lately Vica-Principal of St. Mary Hall, Oxford. 1868.

The purpose of this work is to supply materials for a History of Academical Life and Mudies in the University of Oxford during the 13th, 14th, and 15th senturies.
